Decision pending on appeal

By Jane Lane and Theresa Sullivan

Incumbent selectman Mary Jane McArthur was victorious in last week's recount, but there are indications challenger Doris Golden will not accept defeat in silence.

McArthur was determined the winner of the ballot recount by a two-vote margin. With 16 ballots under contention, there is a basis for appeal, if that is the direction Golden intends to follow.

Golden said this week she has talked with her attorney, William McDermit, a veteran of numerous election recounts, and will sit down to discuss her options "very shortly." At that time, she will decide whether to appeal the recount verdict to Dedham Superior Court.

Last week's recount process was an unusual and unique experience for most observers. In fact, it was the first recount for each of the three members of the Board of Registrars. It was a time to immerse oneself in the midst of Cohasset's political climate - in just one night.

Selectman Mary Jane McArther sat at the far right corner of the Town Hall auditorium doing needlework.

Selectman candidate Doris Golden sat with her family and friends, almost diagonally across from McArthur.

The hall was set up so that the back fifth of the room was partitioned off by a double row of chairs positioned back to back. Security was tight, as gate guard Bernard Mulcahy had a list of the names of people allowed in the counting area. The public was allowed in the back of the hall only.

Each of the four counting tables had two counters. Each candidate was allowed up to 12 observers, some who stood or sat at the counting tables, others who walked around between tables.

Most of the counting tables had six people each. When a ballot was questionable, counters held it up to the flourescent light sitting at each table. If counters or observers were in disagreement over the vote on the ballot, the ballot was taken to the registrars.

The registrars heard arguments from McArthur's attorney Richard Mastrangelo and Golden's attorney William McDermit.

The registrars then ruled on contested ballots. There were 16 contested ballots, McDermit said. These ballots were sealed in a separate envelope and held. A court case would be based on the intent of the vote on these ballots, McDermit said. The package of ballots were impounded and have been secured inside the town clerk's vault.

Of the 16 contested ballots, one was discounted because the ballot wasn't complete, Registrar Alice Daunt said. The other ballots were determined by the registrars as either a vote for Golden, McArthur or a blank, McDermit said.

The ballot counting, scheduled to begin at 7 p.m., began at 8 p.m. As the night wore on slowly, the number of residents observing increased from five to some 30 to 40 at 10 p.m.

The counting was completed at 11:15 p.m.; for awhile observers looked toward the front of the hall, seeming to think the results would be announced soon.

This wasn't to be the case. The talking started quietly

Wunschel honored as the best

When Patricia Wunschel made the decision to accept a teaching position in Cohasset 31 years ago, she set out with a simple goal - "to be the best darned Home Economics teacher they ever had."

Although hundreds of students and teachers would agree she met that goal years ago, it wasn't until last week that she was formally and officially recognized.

At a dinner of the Massachusetts Home Economics Association at M.I.T., Patricia Wunschel was the surprised recipient of the Teacher of the Year award.

An indication of her astonishment upon receiving the honor, is the fact that Patricia is still carrying the plaque, showing it to teachers, students and friends. "At some point," she suspects she let go long enough to place it alongside other Cohasset High School awards.

"I am very honored and quite surprised, but this isn't just my award - it's for the entire school," she states.

Alongside her achievements as a Home Economics teacher for grades 7-12, Patricia has also been director of school food services for the past 31 years. That dual role, and its many responsibilities, is quite unusual, and probably helped the judges decide the award winner, according to nominating committee chairman Emily Danforth.

Danforth won the honor last year, and knows what a supreme accomplishment it is. Nominations for the title are solicited from the 251 school superintendents throughout the state.

And as if winning the state title wasn't exclusive enough, Patricia was a finalist in the American Home Economics Association national competition.

"It's almost unheard of for a teacher from Massachusetts to place among the top finalists,"Danforth explains. "Not only was Patricia honored for the great programs she has initiated in Cohasset, but for the dual role she has assumed since she came there. Most school superintendents have never heard of such a position. Patricia has done an outstanding job for Cohasset and it's really nice that she and the school were honored," Danforth continues.

Patricia, a Scituate resident with her husband Frank for more than 20 years, came to Cohasset High School after graduation from Boston University. She later obtained a Masters degree in Home Economics from Simmons College.

Among her more impressive credentials, according to Superintendent Eugene Crowell, who nominated Patricia, was the development of the Chef II course at the high school. Created 15 years ago as a way to keep the "uninspired" students achieving in school, Chef II has expanded into one of the more popular courses at the school.

A bake shop was set up at the high school and the class serves apprenticeships in the central kitchen in the Home Economics room. Business skills are included in the class curriculum, according to Supt. Crowell. Based on their experience and knowledge gained in this program, these students have found excellent jobs and many have sought further education in the food service business, he adds.

In Patricia's own words, "my Pre-Chef courses are just part of my Home Economics day. These classes and others give me a great sense of satisfaction. I enjoy being a Home Economics teacher and hope the students enjoy their classes in turn."

Typical of Patricia, she views this honor as one deserved by the school system she serves.

"I have tried for 31 years to make Home Economics synonymous with educated, willing, capable, concerned, kind and progressive," she says. That's a difficult goal to strive for, but her students and peers would agree Patricia has achieved her target.

And as she recently wrote, "for 31 years I have labored in the Home Economics vineyards and have had 31 vintage years. How fortunate I have been."

Cohasset students have been lucky to be a product of that harvest.

Cable TV update

The first two subscribers to cable television in Cohasset were expected to be connected to the system this week.

American Cablesystems general manager Steve Farquahar said the television studio and office at 1 Stagecoach Way is 90 percent complete and staff members are expected to occupy the building soon. The cable company recently appeared before the zoning board of appeals for a special permit to construct the studio, but the board decided the studio and office is a permitted use according to zoning bylaws.

Community coordinator John Ronan will also be responsible for local programming. Office manager will be Margaret Bradley.

According to Farquahar, three-quarters of the town has been cabled, although the underground construction work near the Jerusalem Road area will be stalled until all necessary permits are received.

Marketing of the cable system will begin this week, with door-to-door solicitation from American representatives. The area from Main Street west to Beechwood will be marketed first, Farquahar said, and the other half of the town will be completed later.

Planning hearing scheduled

The planning board will hold a site plan review of the proposed Cohasset Heights Plaza on Route 3A, May 16 at 8 p.m. The plaza, to be located at 231 Chief Justice Cushing Highway, is being proposed by Fran Tarzia and Sons of 276 East in Hingham. The hearing will be held at the Bates Building on Elm Street.

Appeals board decisions

The zoning board of appeals voted unanimously to grant a variance to Thomas A. Diab for the construction of two residential units at 62 Howe Road.

Diab had requested a variance for the conversion of an existing structure into three units, but the board approved only two. In its decision the board also ordered the creation of four parking spaces in the front court yard and that a natural screen barrier of plants, shrubs or trees be erected in the parking area.

In a separate decision, the zoning board ruled that a request for a variance from Joseph Rosano to conduct a used car business at 223 Chief Justic Cushing Highway is unncessary. The board noted that Rosano must apply for a special permit to locate the business in a light industry district. The variance was denied on the basis that no evidence was presented to support the request and the board was unable to make any findings.

Bicycles at police station

In order to claim a bicycle, a description as to its make, color, type and serial number (if known) must be given. All bicycles not claimed within the month will be disposed of at a Police department auction to be announced and advertised at a future date.

Housing Authority seeks funds

In a letter submitted to Selectmen last month, Lloyd Prescott, Chairman of the Cohasset Housing Authority, said that group will continue to pursue low and middle income housing throughout the Chapter 705 plan.

Prescott said the authority's application for 705 grant monies has been made to the Office of Community Development. Under that grant plan, up to $65,000 would be available for the purchase and renovation of one housing unit. "We could also build two family homes and the Commonwealth would reimburse us up to $120,000," he added.

No site has yet been selected by the Housing Authority.

"We have gone on record as to the course of action that must be taken. Your (selectmen) assistance, along with the assistance from town boards and townspeople must be given us. This fall could bring about our last reprieve," Prescott stated.

CHS seniors propose changes

With the school year winding to a close, the senior class Student Council representatives had several topics to discuss with the school committee.

During Monday night's committee meeting, representatives John Replogle and Jennifer Ralff made their feelings known on several issues.

First on their agenda was a discussion of elections for next year's Student Council and class officers. That election will take place next Thursday, Replogle explained. And after some discussion, it was recommended that a total of six Student Council representatives to the school committee be elected, three for each six-month period.

It was then that Replogle and Ralff proposed that the seventh and eighth grades be eliminated from the Student Council at the high school. There are no fundraisers during those years, they explained, and their members are often distracted during Student Council meetings.

PSO representative Sue McNamara, concerned that the junior high school would be left with no representation, suggested that a separate Student Council be formed for the junior high school grades.

Both Replogle and Ralff told the committee the Student Council currently carries little weight among the high school students, and in the junior high school, elections are little more than a popularity contest.

School committee members and McNamara suggested the senior high students keep in contact with the younger Student Council representatives, while parent advisors help the younger students organize fund-raising functions.

Another discussion centered on the seniors' efforts to eliminate the graffiti on a number of large rocks on Beach Street. Replogle said the rock-painting, which has become a unapproved tradition among the high school classes, will cost about $139 to remove.

Several senior class members will volunteer to wipe the paint off the rocks and repaint them a natural shade, he said. Ralff noted there are no indications from any class that anyone will "fess up" to the deed, and therefore the situation will linger unless the seniors volunteer their efforts.

Replogle suggested that because the Student Council fails to carry the necessary clout with its peers, it is up to school administrators to establish a penalty against the rock graffiti. Supt. Eugene Crowell said the high school principal, other administrators, and police will be involved in developing and regulating a policy.

The final issue placed before the school committee by the Student Council was a draft of a high school honor code.

Replogle said he and the council have reviewed the proposal during the past four months, and a draft has been prepared. The proposal is based on an honor code established at William and Mary College, although Replogle and Ralff have serious reservations whether such a policy is feasible in Cohasset.

The code, he said, is based on the personal committment of every student. A breakdown in that committment would result in an ineffective code, Replogle added.

"I question whether such a code is workable or necessary," he said. "I have serious reservations about the lack of maturity of the student body to enforce such a code."

Replogle added it would be a good addition to the school, but wondered about the legal technicalities of enforcing the honor code. Ralff noted, "there's a definite need for this with all the cheating and everything, but this seems a little bit above what's needed in a public school." The Student Council members said they attempted to revise the private college's code "so it will fit better" at Cohasset High School.

The school committee took the proposal under advisement.

and returned to its conversational level. As Mastrangelo walked from the counting area with McDermit through the partition, he quipped, "We're going to go outside and have a wrestling match to see who wins."

At 12:40 a.m., Town Counsel Richard Henderson tapped a microphone. Observers stopped talking and listened. False alarm.

After a few minutes, people resumed their conversations. Finally, at about 1 a.m., newly elected Town Clerk Frances Marks announced the results of the recount. First she said, "Thank you for being so patient. . . . We do have a count."

John DeBassio had 1339 votes; Mary Jane McArthur had 1011 votes; Doris Golden had 1009 votes; and there were 797 blanks, Marks said.

Doris Golden's face was without expression. Throughout the seven-hour process, she had sat talking with her family and supporters.

Mary Jane McArthur sat alone working on a needlework-pattern most of the night. When speaking with supporters, she smiled. Otherwise her face showed little emotion.

As the ballots were counted at the front of the hall, the number of onlookers grew. The observers' area seemed to be divided between strong supporters of either candidate on opposite sides, and those who spoke with neither candidate in the middle.

The observers for the first few hours comprised the town's Who's Who list. Selectman John DeBassio stood around for awhile. Selectmen Rocco Laugelle and Frank England milled around for most of the evening.

Judy Volungis, who recently lost a bid for the school committee, arrived at about 9:30 p.m. "after I put the kids to bed,"she explained.

Members of the Fire Dept. including Fire Chief Martin Dooley and School Committee member Dick Conley attended.

Fire Capt. Roger Lincoln arrived at 7 p.m. Asked if he'd stay throughout the recount process, he said, "I'm going to be here 'til the cows come home."

Arne Gjesteby, who recently ran unsuccessfully for Water Commission, said he ended up at town hall because, "I went for a walk. This is a nice place to go for a walk." In a more serious tone he said, "This is a place you can see democracy at work."

Most recount participants, weary after the tiring night, were nonetheless pleased with the progress made in the few hours. Town Clerk Marks, who had never played an active role in a recount, said the proceedings "went very smoothly."

Registrar Alice Daunt, who verbally sparred with the two attorneys at various times that night, said she thought the system worked well "although I was surprised at the amount of bickering going on." It was a complicated process, she added, but everyone worked well together.

There was at least one resident at town hall that night whose thoughts were of things more recreational than municipal. It seems he would have rather have been a spectator of a basketball game than in a political arena as he constantly questioned new arrivals, "have you heard the Celtics score yet?"

Mitman voted board chairman

Cliff Mitman Jr. is the new Chairman of the Cohasset Board of Selectmen, John England is Vice Chairman.

The Board met last Thursday night, May 3, with Jan Daggett and Sewer Commissioner Ted Guild to discuss the alternative warrant articles to implement the Ward Plan.

"If the warrant articles don't pass," said Daggett, "where will Cohasset be? The townspeople should know what they will be going back to."

"If the Sewer Commission Article is defeated," said Guild, "we'll be right back with Metcalf & Eddy...the state will move."

Guild described the Ward alternative as "the most economical."

Chartis Langmaid, chairman of the Sewer Advisory Commission said that group is "extremely pleased with the work of Ward Engineering."

Langmaid referred to a public hearing on May 24, requesting "citizens to respond to the Ward report."

She encouraged the Sewer Commission and the Board of Selectmen to "be as flexible as possible" in their recommendations.

FACILITY PERMITS

The Board met with Jack Worley and Jim Gallagher of the Recreation Department to discuss Section VIII of the Facility Permits by-law.

Section VIII concerns permits for cars registered out-of-state vehicles.

Vice Chairman England made a "distinction between a personal car and a company car."

Perviously, a personally-owned vehicle received "a letter for 30 days" allowing it access to the town's facilities.

When or if the registration changed to Cohasset, the owner of the vehicle then received a sticker. A company car received no permit.

"What is the premise of a sticker?" Worley asked the Board. "Being a resident or having a car registered in Cohasset?"

"Both." answered England.

The Board narrowed the qualifications for out-of-state vehicle permits to homeowners in Cohasset who reside out of state, and those whose cars are registered in Massachusetts, but not in the town of Cohasset.

The Board intends that this regulation will serve as "an incentive" for residents to register their cars in Cohasset and increase local revenue through the automobile excise tax.

TOWN MEETING CHANGES

The Board will recommend to the Town Moderator that Monday, March 25, 7:30 p.m. be scheduled for the next year's town meeting, and Saturday, March 30, at 10 a.m. be slated for town elections.

SECOND POLICE SERGEANT EXAM

The Board agreed to a second police sergeant's exam to be scheduled on Oct. 23.

Selectman John DeBassio expressed concern that with the approach of summer, the vacancy still has not been filled.

DeBassio suggested the Board "check with Civil Service about naming a temporary sergeant."

☐ Congratulations are certainly in store for Louise and Walter Wheelwright Jr., who celebrated an occasion that everyone hopes to reach in their married life...imagine, fifty years of being married! Best wishes to the Wheelwrights on their 50th; a true milestone.

☐ Tom Stanford has a reason to be proud of all of his efforts — he made the Dean's List with honors at Northeastern this term, that shows just how hard he worked!

☐ The Senior Class Play was a grand success, as everyone who either saw it or participated in it knows. What several don't know is that there was a true hero in the cast...Linton Young, one of the lead "gamblers" in the production, actually saved one of his fellow actor's life after the show on opening night. It seems that she inadvertently swallowed her retainer, and was choking...Linton gave her the Heimlich maneuver and literally saved her life! The definition of a true hero indeed!

☐ It's grand to be able to report that Caroline Williams is back at home in good ol' Cohasset after a long siege in both a hospital and a convalescent home. Just in time to see all of the bulbs and trees come into bloom...great timing!

☐ Tonight (May 10) is an important night for Junior class members and their parents...the Guidance Dept. is sponsoring a college admissions information program. It will be held in the High School Cafeteria from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m., and is to be very informative, including: Admission process, admission credentials, college visits, and the college application's completion. There are two handbooks that will be handed out to help the students that were compiled by the guidance staff.

☐ Tim Marsac is reported to be doing much better after his recent accident at home with his electric saw...knowing Tim, he was probably thinking up a new Little League play instead of concentrating on what he was doing..in any case, here's to a speedy recovery, Tim.

☐ Things are moving right along with the plans of the class of 1959's reunion...lots of detectives in the class are making it possible to reach almost every class member, should be a great turnout. More news as it comes in...

☐ More good news...Lydia Erickson is at home and recovering rapidly after her recent surgery. Missed seeing her smiling face around town!

☐ Thomas B. Young has "received his orders". After completing Air Force Basic Training, he has been assigned to Chanute Air Force Base in Illinois.

☐ We are like a "Mini Broadway" this month, what with two productions going on...even though "Guys and Dolls" is over, you can still catch some locals performing this weekend in "Detective Story", to be held at the Town Hall at 8 p.m. Thursday, Friday and Saturday, both this weekend and next. Don't miss it.

☐ Carlo Conte and Barbara Conte are special people indeed...As most people know, Mr. Conte makes miniature furniture (to scale) for dollhouses and collectors, and his talents are unbelievable. He was one of the local donors to support the Channel 2 Auction, and is sure to help them in their efforts to make money.

☐ It seemed that the Ride-A-Bike for Retarded held last Sunday was a huge success. Sponsored by the Cohasset Teachers Association, a lot of riders both young and old, did their best to raise money. Judging by the traffic, they more than met their quota.

☐ Congratulations are due to Staci Stobart and Michael Greiner, two members of the Junior Class that are national finalists in the Washington Workshop Congressional Seminar essay contest. To reach that stage in the competition really took a lot of hard work, and they had to defeat both state and eastern regional students. Good luck in the finals to both students.

☐ Had a most exciting report from Kevin Soule this week. A most unusual sight to see in Cohasset are Canadian Geese, and there are two living in the little pond at the foot of Spring Street (the one maintained by the recreation dept.). They are a sight to behold, it's worth going by to see.

A political science major, Wright was recognized for her academic achievement and superior scholarship. She was one of 4 seniors, 2 juniors and 1 sophomore selected for the honor.

Membership in Phi Gamma Mu is granted to those who have shown an unusual interest and aptitude in the study of the social sciences.

☐ John Ayer a senior at Colby College (Waterville, Maine), has achieved distinction and has been named to the first-semester dean's list of the 1983-84 academic year.

A government-public policy major, Ayer is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander P. Ayer of Bayberry Lane, and is a graduate of Cohasset High School.

☐ Don't forget to give me your news...

A learning experience

Last week's recount was a first-time experience for most of us, including many of the people directly involved.

Truth is, things lingered on a bit much, but it was fun. Probably not for the two contestants involved, but for the casual observer. Too bad they didn't hold it on a Saturday, maybe more people would have attended -have picnic lunches on the Common while awaiting the results.

Not to poke fun at such a serious endeavor by the Board of Registars, the attorneys, candidates and the observers. Because despite the potential for chaos and confrontation, it was avoided.

We couldn't help take note that Town Clerk Frances Marks, who has quietly completed her duties for many years, has suddenly been baptized into a frenzy of the unknown. She took up the challenge to run for town clerk, feeling she was the best-qualified candidate.

Not one to seek publicity, Frances decided to run for elected office. As if that wasn't enough, the matter of changing the post to a fulltime position with a salary change was voted at town meeting.

That issue has not been fully addressed, as this woman who presided over the election, the petition for the recount, and the recount proceedings is still receiving $119 per week. She will not be paid a full week's salary until the new fiscal year arrives July 1.

And anyone who has ever visited Frances at her office knows her duties far exceed that insulting salary.

Certainly residents are aware that a tight fist must be held around the town's finances. Then the question is, if we can't afford to pay town employees what they are worth, who will bother seek our employment?

Year after year, department supervisors submit proposed budgets that are, in polite terms, "pared down." It's more realistic to say they are pushed through a processor and squeezed through a shredder. It's a degrading effort for them to publically plea for a typewriter or some clerical help.

And like a tired scenario, year after year, many of their requests are denied for lack of funds.

So now, Frances Marks, who has served the residents of this town for many years, remains silent, as is her tradition. But the Building Inspector has left and there are sure to be others to follow.

What the answer to this problem is, we can't answer. We can't rely on dedication alone to motivate people to seek low-paying professional positions.

Now that things have settled down a bit, maybe it's time to be mindful of our past and tred slowly toward the future. We can't ignore the fact that municipal employment may have reached a turning point or a deadend.

To all our wonderful Cohasset moms-- take Sunday off

No big band sounds on MTV

By Claire McDonough

As our car pulled into the driveway, the Dragon's face grew red.

"Call the cable TV people," he roared. "We're having a lock put on our set."

"Have the children been watching something objectionable?" I asked anxiously.

He shook his head. "Not watching. Listening. Don't you hear it?"

"You mean that music? I thought you had turned on the car radio. Awfully loud."

"Are you out of your mind?" he asked. "It's that confounded 24 hour rock station. They play it full blast. Don't you see the house shaking?"

"I feel some tremors," I admitted. "Why did we ever subscribe to it?"

"It was part of the package," he said grimly as he opened the front door.

We fought our way through a blare of sound and saw Breida and Skipper nodding their heads in time to the music. They were sitting on the floor directly in front of the TV, presumably so they could hear it better.

"How can you stand listening to that noise?" I screamed.

"We can't hear you," they chorused.

Skipper break danced us down the hall to a room where the sound was slightly muted.

"Did you say something?" he asked.

The Dragon's face went from red to purple. "Haven't you ever heard of Lawrence Welk?" he demanded.

Skipper nodded. "I think I read about him. In ancient history."

"No," Breida corrected him. "He's that guy who dances with old women and blows soap bubbles. Some people think he's a musician."

"Do you realize what you're doing to your ears?" I sighed. "By the time you're 21 you'll be stone deaf."

"What's the point to being able to hear," Breida said reasonably, "if all there is is Lawrence Welk?"

"O.K.," I said, "it doesn't have to be Lawrence Welk. But how about Perry Como? Dean Martin? Frank Sinatra?"

They looked at each other. "Gross me out," they said in unison.

I searched my memory desperately. "Well, then, the Four Lads? Rosemary Clooney? The Mills Brothers? Even," I threw caution to the winds, "the Beach Boys."

Breida smirked. "What would James Watt say?"

Skip rolled his eyes heavenward. "They're all terrible. You can understand every word they sing."

"O.K.," the Dragon said folding his arms across his chest. "If you kids want to play hardball, we'll play hardball. The television is off until the dogs are walked, every bit of your homework is done, and your rooms are immaculate. Then, for every hour of rock you watch, you have to watch two hours on the educational channel."

They sighed, and trudged back to the television. With an expression akin to the one St. Stephen probably wore just before the stones started flying, Breida snapped off the set.

It was music to my ears.

'That's incredible!!'

To the Editor:

The following very unpleasant experience happened May 4 at Ko Ko Island Chinese Restaurant on Route 3A in Cohasset.

I ordered a bottle of beer before ordering lunch and after tasting it, found it to taste salty.

The waitress came to take our order and I sent the beer back. Immediately, the owner came over holding the bottle and told me I'd better get something else besides beer. Incredulous, at this attitude, my friends and I got up and left.

The owner followed us to the parking lot waving the check in his hand demanding payment. When I refused he said he would call the police and I told him to go ahead.

Shortly two cruisers arrived and the officer told me I'd be better off to pay for the beer (reluctantly, I did)!

Yes, this really happened. That's incredible!

Warning on youth parties

To the Editor:

(This is an open letter to the community from Police Chief Kealey. Ed.)

The Cohasset Police Department wishes to clarify any misconception parents may have regarding the hosting of parties for minors. During this time of year many prom, graduation and other parties are held in our community. While the law allows great latitude with regard to an individuals conduct in ones own home, and with ones own children, it does not allow alcohol to be served to other minors, either directly by the host, or with the knowledge of the host.

If the Cohasset Police Department has to respond to a party, or becomes aware of alcohol being served to minors from other sources, you will be subject to court action.

Concern should center on the liability involved, other than a criminal complaint, including civil liability, if someone is injured on the way home from your party, as a result of having been served alcohol in your home.

In the past, party hosts have requested, and police officers have been assigned to various house parties. Now and in the future, I want parents to be aware that I will not allow an assignment of a detail officer to any party when I have pre-party knowledge that liquor is to be served to or allowed to be consumed by minors.

The Cohasset Police Department is represented at many meetings of groups of concerned citizens regarding the abuse of alcohol. Many remedies and various ideas are discussed at these sessions. Please help these concerned citizens, parents, and especially the youth of Cohasset, by taking a positive step and responding with a negative 'no' if asked to host an alcohol related party for minors in your home.

Joseph M. Kealey, Chief
Cohasset Police Department

Thanks from Mary Jeanette

To the Editor:

It is unusual for me not to have opposition. I am grateful that the voters of Cohasset, Hingham and Hull have been very supportive in past campaigns. We will campaign as usual and will still be seen as often as in past campaigns. I will still continue to be available and active in my district. My constituents are very knowledgeable and aware of the actions of their elected officials.

We are pleased that the voters of Cohasset, Hingham and Hull support my activities on behalf of our towns, including my battle against casinos, strong actions for local aid and home rule and persistance to obtain money and constructions projects.

I am a member of three very active Committees, Counties, Local Affairs and Taxation. The 3rd Plymouth District Legislator has served as Chairwoman of the Massachusetts Women Legislators' Caucus, first woman to be President of the Massachusetts Legislators Association and has been appointed to several special Commissions by the Speaker of the House.

I will be one of the two Co-Chairmen heading up the women for Reagan campaign in Massachusetts for the Presidents Re-election.

Among some of my accomplishments were, the Alcohol Driving Bill; establishing an organ donor fund; the "Lemon Law" and sponsored and supported successful legislation in the areas of taxation, child abuse (I was a member of the Special Commission which saw the child abuse statute on the books); benefits for the handicapped and alcoholism related laws.

Thanks for a fine job

To the Editor:

Now that spring has arrived and everything is comfortably blooming, it scarcely seems possible that only six weeks ago we were in the throes of a horrendous blizzard. We would like to thank the Tree and Highway Depts. of our fine Town for the excellent job they did in restoring order and beauty to Cohasset.

Very truly yours,
Regina and Gerald Schultz

Class size addressed

Spurred by the concern of several parents, the school committee is in the process of developing a class size policy, to be used as a guideline in evaluating student-teacher ratios.

Committee member Jack Langmaid said Monday night he was in the midst of developing such a policy, so teaching assignments may be made the end of this school year, and adjustments may be settled the first of September.

The subject of creating a standardized class size policy was brought to the committee's attention after Deer Hill School principal Kenneth Ekberg met with 80 parents about teaching assignments next year. The debate centers on the projected 78 fifth grade students expected at the school next year.

The current proposal calls for 26 students in three sections. Some parents would rather have four sections, with an additional teacher added to the staff, Ekberg explained.

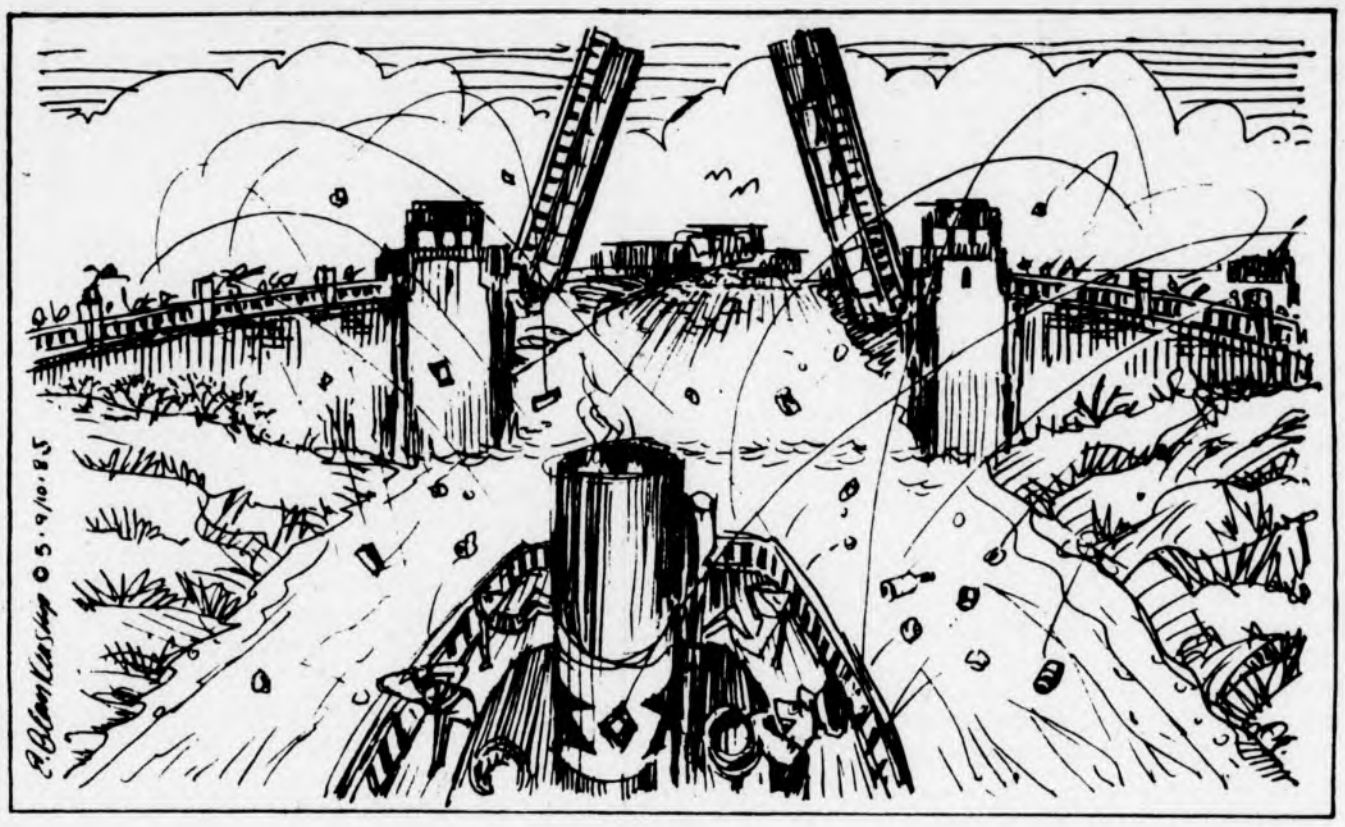
The parents charged it was not the inequitable distribution of students they opposed, but the history of change which has accompanied these children throughout their education.

According to a letter signed by almost 30 parents, these 78 children experienced a change in kindergarten teachers, and they had three teachers per year during the first, second and third grades.

The letter stated, "we feel strongly that the resolution of pupil/teacher ratios for next year, and beyond, should be equitable as well as educationally based. The resolution should also set a standard for class sizes that should apply for all students until changed."

Ekberg further explained the parents were not so much concerned with a possible 26-1 student-teacher ratio, but they concentrated their concern on the educational history of these children, and the absence of a policy on which the school committee will base future decisions.

Committee member Martha Gjesteby said it was difficult for the committee to establish a class size policy because it may affect future contract negotiations and bargaining. Other committee members, and Superintendent Eugene Crowell noted that class size can't be accurately formulated until the first of the new school year.



Another obstacle to overcome, Crowell added, was if another teaching position is warranted for the future fifth grade class, where will the funding be found ? If a half-time or fulltime position is necessary, the money for the staffing will have to be pulled from another program or teaching position, he said.

For instance, if the kindergarten class for next year expands beyond 80, "we're looking at two fulltime teachers, not one and a half," Crowell said.

Several parents, including Karin Bartow, said they would like to see smaller class sizes for next year's fifth grade, but not at the expense of other students.

Crowell supported the idea of creating a class size policy, and the school committee members were unanimous in their support of the concept. The policy will be geared for implementation in September, with the possibility of resolving the issue by late June or July.

Murray's memos

Tax reductions are much more common than tax increases this year, as many states have seen revenues rise faster than anticipated. At least nine states will lower income or general sales taxes, and additional cuts are likely before all 50 legislatures adjourn for the year.

Tax Cuts

According to the National Conference of State Legislatures, the tax cuts can be divided into two categories — outright reductions enacted this year and decreases as temporary tax levies expire.

Minnesota and Wisconsin voted to repeal the final year of temporary ten percent income surcharges enacted in 1983. Nebraska lowered its income tax from 20 to 19 percent of federal tax liability. Delaware and Michigan are debating the size and shape of income tax reductions, but both House and the Governor favor reductions, so some cuts appear assured.

Idaho enacted a permanent four percent sales tax beginning in July, which represents a half percent rollback from the temporary rate in effect since last year.

Four states are expected to allow temporary increases to expire. June 30 will mark the end of increases in the income tax in Illinois and the sales tax in Colorado. Pennsylvania's income tax goes down on the same date. Nebraska's sales tax went down as scheduled March 31.

Tax Cuts Closer to Home

Two other states, New Jersey and Massachusetts, have moved closer to establishing tax cuts for its citizens in recent days.

New Jersey's Governor Thomas Kean, in announcing a budget surplus approximately $120 million more than expected, said he planned to return most of it in the form of rebates. The Governor has asked the New Jersey Legislature to approve a $90 million one-time increase in the state's homestead-rebate program.

Here in Massachusetts, a Republican-offered amendment adopted by the House in budget debate last week, will soon provide homeowners with tax relief. Commonwealth homeowners, who currently pay a mortgage will be able to deduct 50 percent of the total mortgage interest up to $2,500 on their state income tax. It will apply to those owner-occupied residences which contain no more than six units.

In order to become law, this tax cut must pass the Senate and be signed by the Governor. Once again, I must ask you to contact your State Senator and the Governor and urge their support for a tax cut we rightly deserve!

AFS auction May 12

The Cohasset Chapter of the American Field Service holds its annual auction Saturday, May 12, in Walton Rodgers Hall at St. Stephen's Church on the Common. The viewing and Silent Auction begin at 7 p.m. Bidding commences promptly at 8 with Linton Young and Gerald Schultz as auctioneers-extraordinaire.

Funds raised by this event represent the sole support of this volunteer organization. Operating expenses annual approach $1000 for Cohasset's participation in this international/intercultural program. Annual scholarships are given to AFS applicants who show a certain financial need. Applicants' parents supply the balance.

To date, the AFS has partial-funded cultural experiences for Cohasset students in such far-away places as Uruguay, France, Amsterdam, Germany, Spain, Switzerland, Costa Rica, Agentina, Mexico, and Kenya. Two students are presently preparing to live with families in Portugal and Brazil.

All these experiences sift directly back into Cohasset's populace when the students return and share their experiences with friends, classmates, and town organizations.

In a time of education cutbacks, the AFS gives back a lot of what is slowly being lost in students' enrichment. All contributions to AFS are tax deductible.

Maritime museum tours

The Cohasset Historical Society and the Cohasset Recreaton Department will sponsor a special preseason guided tour of the Historical Society's two museums on Elm Street, Cohasset Center, Thursday, May 24, at 11 a.m.

This marks the third year of combined sponsorship of special museum tours by the two groups.

Open for the tour will be the Capt. John Wilson Historical House, itself an early Cohasset home, and the Maritime Museum, an 18th century ship's chandlery.

The Capt. John Wilson House holds the Society's collection of early home furnishings, furniture, children's toys and local artwork.

Most of the historical artifacts located in the house are from old Cohassset homes and are representative of the 18th and early 19th centuries.

The Capt. John Wilson House was built in 1810 for the Cohasset Seafarer of that name. The Wilson family lived in the house for over a century. The Maritime Museum is the repository of an extensive exhibit of artifacts, models, documents and pictures dating from New England's great Age of Sail.

Featured are relics from some of the many 19th century shipwrecks which all too frequently occurred at the dangerous Cohasset Rocks.

The history of world famous Minot's Ledge Lighthouse is depicted in artifacts, prints and photographs. 19th century sailing ship models show some of the types of vessels constructed at local shipyards as well as larger vessels of the kind sailed by Cohasset's "Deep Sea Captains."

The Maritime Museum itself originally was the ship chandlery for Cohasset shipowner Samuel Bates' fishing business at Cohasset Harbor. The building was moved to its present site during the 1950's when it was presented to the Historical Society by Mr. & Mrs. William C. Cox.

The Maritime Museum also houses a large collection of general historical artifacts, ranging from early housewright's tools and Cordwainer's (shoemaker's) equipment to stone tools of the Quonohassit Indians.

Diorama models portray places and events of significence in Cohasset's history.

Cohasset and South Shore residents and visitors are welcome to join the museum tour.

The tour will be accompanied by the Society's Curator David Wadsworth.

To register for this spring event please call the Cohasset Recreation Department's Town Hall office at 383-6791 as early as possible. The tour will meet at the Maritime Museum.

Flea market May 19

The Cohasset Historical Society will hold its annual spring Flea Market at the Society's headquarters building, the Caleb Lothrop House, 14 Summer Street, Saturday, May 19.

The hours are from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. This gala event, which has become a Society tradition, features a wide range of donated items from kitchenware to sporting goods, and from books to bric-a-brac and collectables. A feature of the event will be a table of baked goods, mostly home made, available for as long as they last.

Dealer's space is available for $10.

The Society is still accepting Flea Market donations. Call 383-0773 or 383-6930 for information.

PSO annual meeting

The Cohasset Parent School Organization will hold its second annual meeting, May 24 in Room 107 of the High School. Refreshments will be served at 7 p.m. and the meeting will begin promptly at 7:30 p.m.

All parents of Cohasset school children are automatically members of the PSO and are encouraged to attend this final general meeting of the 1984 school term.

Walpole Woodworkers 50th ANNIVERSARY

Congressman Studds' report. . .

By Gerry E. Studds

This past week, I cosponsored three House bills which, if enacted, would significantly strengthen federal protections of our nation's air, water and natural landscape.

First, I joined with 50 of my House colleagues in cosponsoring legislation to extend and toughen the Clean Air Act, a cornerstone of our environmental safeguards. Reducing Americans' exposure to hazardous air pollutants ought to be one of our top public health priorities, but the record of the Environmental Protection Agency in this area is mixed.

Second, I have cosponsored legislation which provides for prevention and clean-up of gasoline leaks into our fragile groundwater supply. Nationally, there are an estimated 75,000 underground gasoline tanks, many abandoned long ago, that are currently leaking hydrocarbons. The serious local dimensions of this problem are also becoming alarmingly clear.

Needless to say, the principal proponents of the gasoline exclusion are many of the same oil companies which originally installed these underground tanks. It is my hope that the bipartisan support for this bill will survive heavy lobbying from the oil industry and that we can make some progress toward solving this problem soon.

Third, I cosponsored legislation to establish a National Bottle Bill, much like the current beverage container recycling law in Massachusetts and eight other states. The bottle bill would control refuse while conserving energy and could be administered efficiently at little public cost. A national bottle bill would not only extend the borders of the deposit refund program, but would also standardize the whole system, resulting in cost savings for both consumers and the bottling industry.

Against Abington, Cohasset lost 8-1.

CHS sports roundup...

In addition," added Fallon, "they held us to only three hits, and that didn't help."

In competition against Duxbury, Cohasset fell short by one run, losing 12-11.

Cohasset was up by one run going into the bottom of the seventh, but Duxbury came back to score two runs on a two-run single with two outs remaining to win the game.

"We should have won," commented Coach Fallon, "but defensively, we made too many mistakes."

Cohasset also lost against Hanover 5-3 in an extra inning.

"We left the bases loaded four times," remarked Coach Fallon, "and the failure to take advantage of these offensive situations cost us the game."

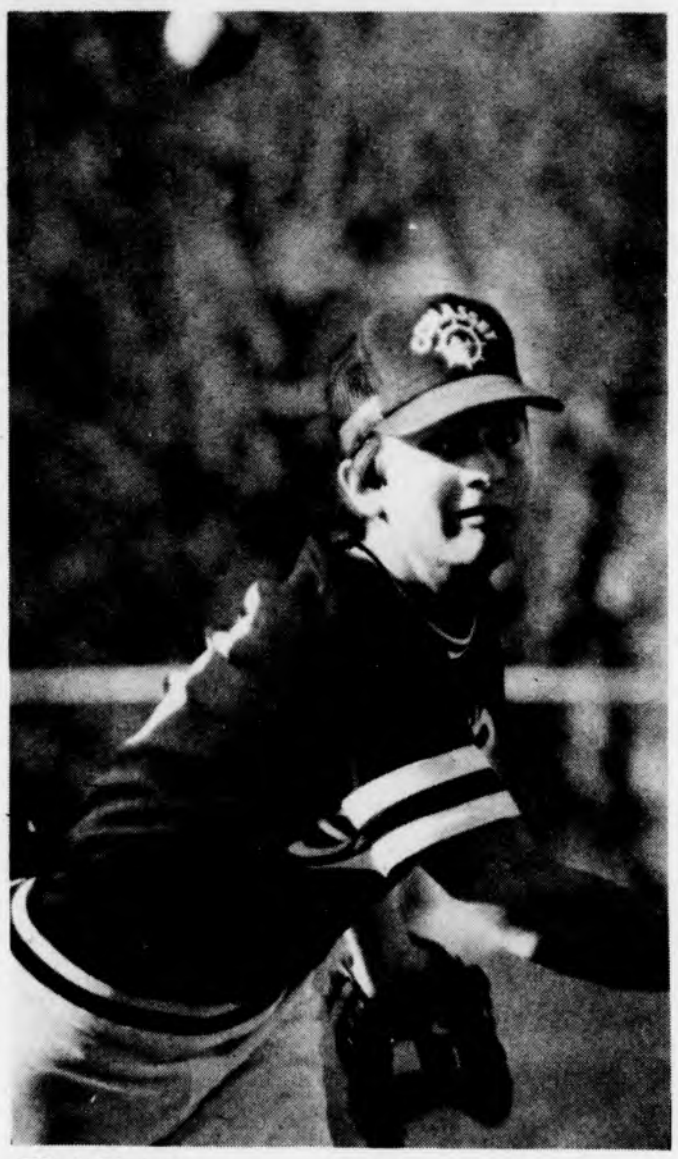
Janet DiGirolamo had three hits, while Kerry O'Brien and Jill Nedrow each chipped in with two.

"Throughout the week," concluded Coach Fallon, "we were hurt by inconsistency and we failed to execute the offensive game, especially in Hanover and Duxbury."

Boys Baseball

The boys had a disappointing week, losing all four games. However, their hitting is beginning to come around as their ten runs against Holbrook suggests.

Monday, the boys lost to Holbrook 15 to 10. In a makeup game with Abington Tuesday, the boys lost, but their hitting showed great improvement.



Against Duxbury, the boys were losing 10 to 1 in the second inning. Cohasset made a valiant effort in the sixth inning to score six runs. In that inning, Chris Kuhn hit a triple with bases loaded, and Philip Mahoney went three for three. The final score was 13 to 7.

The team lost in Hanover 13 to 0. Jamie Roy had the only base hit for Cohasset in the seventh inning.

Golf

The golf team lost one match and won another this week for an overall record of four wins and one loss.

Tuesday, Cohasset lost to Duxbury 8 to 1. Troy Chatterton played outstanding, and gave Cohasset their only point. The boys bounced back Thursday to beat Middleboro 9 to 0.

Boys Tennis

The tennis team won a match and lost two last week, to make their over-all record three wins and five losses.

The boys shut out Rockland last Monday 5-0. This was Cohasset's first shut-out of the season. All the boys played very well.

Wednesday, the team lost 5 to 0 to the reigning champions of the league, Duxbury. In this match, Cohasset's Rich Redick played more games with Duxbury's number one player than any other boy in the league. Dereck Lacks, the number three player, went three games with his opponent. The boys played their best tennis of the season.

At Hanover Thursday, Cohasset lost 4 to 1. The team's next match is Wednesday at Scituate.

JV Baseball

Cohasset's Junior Varsity baseball team evened their record at 4 and 4, at the halfway mark of the season.

After a rough start, which saw the Skippers trounced by Holbrook 22 to 4 on Monday, this very young team featuring one 7th grader, five 8th graders, and five 9th graders, fought back.

On Tuesday Cohasset defeated Abington 13 to 3, and on Wednesday they belted Duxbury 10 to 2; on Thursday they downed Hanover 7 to 4.

Winning pitchers: Mike Gentile complete game win vs. Abington; Bill McKenna complete game two hitter vs. Duxbury; and Mark Corkery, 7th grader, the winner with an impressive save for Pete Sandblom against Hanover.

Their coach Dave Bernstein doesn't know what to expect at this point. "On Monday we were horrible! We looked like a bad Little League team. Yet on Tuesday and Wednesday we played errorless baseball. The kids feel we can have a winning record for the rest of the year. Who am I to argue with a bunch of 7th and 8th graders", he said.

SPECIAL ARTS FESTIVAL

"Kids can do anything, and special needs kids are no exception." Two hundred and fifty young children with special needs attended the annual Massachusetts Very Special Arts Festival at the Boston Children's Museum on Monday, April 30. Among the participants this year were the children from Cohasset's Early Special Needs class.

The festival offered hands-on workshops in the arts including, clay, bubbles, face painting, music and storytelling. This year's events were sponsored by the State Department of Education and the State Committee Arts for the Handicapped.

Our Cohasset youngsters enjoyed the experience and got the message that their disabilities did not stand in the way of exploring the visual and performing arts.

Norwell theater to open

Theater-goers, weary of the distance, parking fees and high ticket costs of professional theaters in Boston and Providence, will have the opportunity of enjoying top-notch plays right here on the South Shore. Come October, the doors will open on America's newest professional playhouse — The Nickerson Theatre.

Beginning construction the middle of this month on a site just off the Southeast Expressway in Norwell, The Nickerson Theatre will bring professional actors in from Boston and New York for its eight-month season. These performers will be seen in six productions which will include two comedies, one musical, one drama, one mystery and a warm family play.

The project of South Shore businessman, J. Arnold Nickerson, president and owner of Nickerson Machinery, located in Accord Park, The Nickerson Theatre will offer family entertainment.

"We wanted a theater that you could bring your family and friends to without being embarrassed by offensive content or price. We also wanted a theater folks would be proud to visit and comfortable to sit in. An intimate facility, one in which you could see and hear from any seat in the house," says Nickerson.

After almost two years of planning, construction is scheduled for completion in mid-September. The playhouse features Tudor-style architecture, complimenting the Nickerson Machinery offices on an adjacent site. A well-lit lot will offer free parking and attendants. Valet parking will also be available, as well as an elevator for those not wishing to walk up the exterior steps of the building.

The interior of the playhouse will have all amenities, including a lobby with concession stand, a large attended (and automated) coat room, and spacious restrooms.

The theater itself will seat 360 patrons and will have only 14 rows of seats for the listening and viewing pleasure of the audience. A three-foot distance between rows will allow for maximum leg-room comfort and passage to and from seats. The seats will be luxuriously cushioned — including armrests.

Particular attention has been paid to accommodate elderly patrons and those in wheelchairs, including an easily accessible entrance and exit as well as restroom facilities.

The Nickerson Theatre is currently beginning a full-scale subscription drive which will give South Shore residents an opportunity to become Charter Members and receive a substantial discount on theater tickets for the season. "Early-bird" subscribers may subscribe to the six play season and see up to two plays for free.

Although the special ticket prices will be in effect until July 15, there has already been great interest in the new professional theater, and interested theater-goers in the area are encouraged to get their orders in as soon as possible.

For more information and a detailed brochure, please call The Nickerson Theatre Box Office at 871-2400 from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m., Monday through Friday; 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Saturday.

ART STUDENTS AWARDED

The following students from Cohasset High and Junior High art classes were given "merit certificates" for their art work entered in The Patriot Ledger "Awards for the Arts in the Schools" contest.

The contest was set up to promote and give recognition and cash awards for the creative abilities of students in schools throughout the South Shore.

Judging will be done by representatives of The Patriot Ledger and the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset.

All entries chosen in individual school districts will be displayed with the contest winners at the South Shore Art Festival on the Cohasset Common, June 22-24. The works included were paintings, drawings, 3-D art and photography.

KIRSTY MUNRO NOMINATED

To recognize publicly some of the best student writers in the nation, the National Council of Teachers of English will give achievement awards in writing to approximately eight hundred students who will graduate in 1985.

Because Cohasset High School has less than five hundred students in grades 10 through 12, only one candidate can be selected.

For her outstanding achievement in creative and expository writing, Kirsty Munro has been honored with the nomination for an NCTE Achievement Award.

CHS STUDENT ELECTED V.P.

Joanie Chisholm, a junior at Cohasset High School was recently elected Vice President of the Southeastern Massachusetts Association of Student Councils. Joan, who is a member of the CHS Girls Soccer and Tennis Teams, is the first Cohasset student to win elective office in this organization.

The election was held during the Student Council regional conference held at Dennis-Yarmouth Regional High School on Wednesday, May 2.

Other Student Council representatives at the conference were: Sandy Best, Lisa Cuff and Philip Mahoney. Gino Di Girolama, assistant principal and student council advisor, was also present at the conference. This year's slate of officers come from Hanover, Silver Lake, Middleboro, Hingham and Plymouth.

SCIENCE TEACHER RECEIVES DOCTORATE

John G. Mika, a member of the Cohasset High School Science Department, will receive a Doctorate in Science Education from Boston College during commencement exercises at the college on Monday, May 21.

Mika, who has taught at Cohasset High School for the past 14 years, currently teaches biology and physical science.

His Doctoral Dissertation is entitled: "A Game Advance Organizer by Concrete and Formal Operational Students Learning to Solve Mendelian Genetics Problems."

House and Garden Tour"

The Greek Church, Panagia of Cohasset (formerly Pope Memorial) is sponsoring a house and garden tour, Saturday, May 19, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The tour begins at the Panagia Church, and the trip takes you to seven beautiful homes.

On this tour, midway, you will visit the Gracious English Garden located at the back of the federal style home of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Pierce where refreshments will be served.

You will also have some delicious Greek pastry.

The first three houses you will visit, were built by Col. and Mrs. Albert A. Pope in the late 1800's.

Col. Pope was a wealthy manufacturer from Hartford, Connecticut where he established the first bicycle factory in the USA.

Another charming home was once the kennel which housed Gordon Setters and Chesapeake Bay Retrievers.

This house is a joyful mix of country and English style befitting the English cottage exterior.

On Atlantic Ave. in Cohasset, overlooking the beautiful Atlantic you will visit a home with warmth and beauty of many architectural antiques.

Another first on this "house tour" will be Cohasset's newest condominium cluster development.

Spring concert May 12

The Choral Art Society will present its spring concert Saturday, May 12, at 8 p.m., in St. Luke's Episcopal Church, Rte. 3A and First Parish Road in Scituate. William C. Sano, music director, will conduct the chorus, orchestra, Narrator, soloists, and speakers in Arthur Honegger's dramatic oratorio "King David."

Almost a concert opera, "King David" vividly portrays David as a young shepherd, the slayer of Goliath, then warrior and King, to his death and the crowning of his son, Solomon, as ruler of Israel. The chorus portrays Israelite soldiers, maidens, angels, mourning women, priests and prophets; the soloists are David, an Angel, and a Daughter of Israel; the speakers the Witch of Endor and the prophet Samuel.

Paul Benzaquin of Marshfield, reporter, writer, and broadcaster, who has been narrator for many musical groups including the Boston Esplanade Orchestra, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be the Narrator.

Pamela Wolfe of Norwell has the taxing soprano role of the Angel; Donna Hewitt-Didham, contralto, and Bruce Kolb, tenor, both of Boston, sing the youthful and mature David, respectively. Four ensemble "angels" from the chorus are Kathleen Keegan, Leslie McLeod-Warrick, Carol Miles, all of Scituate, and Judith Reiman of Duxbury. Patricia Goin, also from Duxbury, will portray the Witch of Endor, in an incantation for speaking voice.

Chorus members from Cohasset include M. Rita Burke, Linda Henderson, Marilynn Humphreys, Millard MacNeill, Leigh Knapp, Edwina Migliaccio, and Peter Tolman. Tickets are $5, students and seniors $3.50, and are available from singers or at the door. Since Choral Art performances are usually standing-room only, concert-goers are urged to arrive promptly. This program is supported, in part, by the Massachusetts Arts Lottery, as administered by the Scituate Arts Council.

Cohasset country fair

The Cohasset Country Fair, which begins the summer season on Cohasset Common, will be held Saturday, May 19. This annual event features space for arts, crafts and attic treasure exhibits, as well as exhibits by the town and community organizations.

A refreshment stand, complete with cotton candy and popcorn, operated by the Friends of Boy Scout Troop 28, along with balloons and live exhibits will help make this event on to be enjoyed by young and old.

The Cohasset Country Fair is the major fund-raising event for the benefit of the town's Boy Scout Troop. Proceeds from this event will be used to send the Troop to Washington, D.C. for a six day instructional tour which will form the basis for work on the Citizenship in the Nation merit badge.

One of the highlights of this trip will be the Troop's wreathlaying ceremony at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier at Arlington National Cemetery. The Troop will also be visiting the Capitol to meet with our Congressman and Senators, and will get an opportunity to visit all three branches of our nation's government.

Information for exhibitor space may be had by contacting Peter Lelecas at 383-6195.

Mystery House

week no. 9

It's almost playoff time and there are two contestants fighting for first place with seven correct answers.

Last week's correct answer was 45 Spring Street and not 435-437 Beechwood Street, 126 Border Street, 108-110 Elm Court or 67 North Main Street (other guesses.)

Locating the correct house were Lillian Pierce, Robert Leonard Sr. and Warren Pratt.

The house was built in 1765 by Thomas Pratt, a Cohasset soldier in the American Revolution. He married in that year, Sarah Neal, the daughter of Rev. Jonathan and Abigail (Pratt) Neal.

The exact location is the west side of Spring Street between Pod and Oak Street. It's a yellow house with the sign, "HT 91" on the entryway.

After eight weeks, Robert Leonard Sr. and Warren Pratt are still fighting for first place with seven correct answers. The Galt Grant family drops to second place with six correct answers.

With five correct answers are A. J. Antoine Jr., Betty Enders, and Verna Martini.

Jean Rosano, Lynette Lyndan, Charles Wheelright and Hamilton Tewksbury each have four correct answers.

These people are vying for the retail prizes which will be a $100 gift certificate at the Linen Chest, $50 gift certificate at Hugo's and a $25 gift certificate at Fleming's of Cohasset.

This will be Week 9 of the ten-week Mystery House Tour. If need be, two houses will be provided for playoffs.

Once you find the home, write down the address of the homes, exact number and street along with your name, address and phone number and send it to the "Mystery House Tour", care of the Mariner, Box 71, Cohasset, 02025 or drop of the answers in an envelope at Cohasset Colonial Pharmacy or at Hennessey's News, both in Cohasset Village.

The deadline for weekly entries will be 9:30 a.m. sharp Tuesday.

The following week we will disclose the correct address with a picture of how the home looks today with a little history brief about each house.

Remember, only one guess per week.

This week's clue is: the builder was in hiding but was far from hidden.

School Committee briefs

Attendance policy review

The faculty senate and a sub committee of the school committee will be meeting to discuss further revisions to the high school's attendance policy.

The attendance policy has been in effect for one school year and there are additional revisions which should be made, according to senate president Patricia Wunschel. She said the policy is necessary, and for the most part, it is a proper procedure to follow. But there are sections of the regulations which "penalize" certain students unfairly, she said, "for actions that are not their own."

She also said because of the length of the written policy, many parents have not bothered to read it. On the positive side, Wunschel said the new regulations have made it easier to carry out school attendance policy.

Sub committee members Diane Kornet and Jack Langmaid will meet with the faculty senate to discuss fine tuning the policy. Langmaid said he will announce the date of the next meeting and will invite all interested students to participate in the workshop session.

High school principal Jack Streeter said it is important to develop a policy two weeks before the start of the new school year.

Bank loans parking area

Bob Webster, office manager of the South Shore Bank on Chief Justic Cushing Highway, notified the school department that he will make facilities there available to students to hold car washes.

Webster told school officials he will provide the area and water to hold school-sponsored car washes.

Secretarial contract ratified

The school committee unanimously approved a new one-year contract for the secretarial association, which includes a five and one-half percent across-the-board increase.

After deliberations in executive session, the committee reopened the public meeting to announce its decision Monday night. The contract ratification concluded three-months of deliberations between the Cohasset School Secretary Association representative Stanley Smith, and sub committee members Jack Langmaid and Richard Conley.

The one-year settlement was approved 5-0 by the school committee. According to Superintendent Eugene Crowell, a few minor changes were made to the contract language, including a reclassification of the attendance officer. No major revisions were made to the language pertaining to areas such as seniority or positions reduced in force (rif'd).

How to get More for Your Money at The Meadows

It costs less per square foot to build a two-story home than one that is all on a single level. That's why so many traditional homes are two stories. A smaller roof covers twice the interior space . . . a smaller basement suffices . . . and more home goes on less land. Owning a two-level condominium also offers advantages . . . excellent wall space for hanging paintings and decorative objects . . . lower heating and air conditioning costs . . . and excellent privacy between levels.

We have some very choice two-level attached single family condominium homes available at The Meadows, the very popular and successful Green Company community in Hingham. Most of the two- and three-bedroom units offer large private decks, walk-out basements with walls of glass which can be easily converted. There's a swimming pool, whirlpool, clubhouse and tennis courts.

The sales office and furnished models are open every day from 9 to 5. Two-level homes start at about $170,000. There are also a few single-level homes ranging from about $190,000 to $240,000 if you prefer. Take exit 14 from Route 3 and follow Route 228 toward Hingham four miles, turn right on Free St., one mile to our entrance. Call 740-1500.

This is the architect's rendering of the proposed Rt 3A shopping plaza

Route 3A Plaza plans to be re-reviewed

The planning board continued its site plan review of the proposed Route 3A shopping plaza until May 23, with a reprimand to developers to bring in more complete plans.

The board reviewed engineering plans for the proposed "mini mall" which is scheduled to include a 55,000 square foot "super" supermarket, a bank, a drug store and several smaller shops. But after listening to the engineers who prepared the design of the Sohier-Street-Route 3A plaza, board members said too many unanswered factors warranted a second hearing.

Attorney Charles Humphreys represented developer Donald Staszko during the proceedings, accompanied by an entourage of engineers and traffic experts.

Traffic engineer Norman Abend compiled a lengthy study at the site which was given to each planning board member. His conclusion, based on data at the intersection, was that there would be no significant increase in traffic flow from the proposed plaza.

According to Abend, between 13,000 and 14,000 cars per day travel past the site. The inclusion of the plaza there would not add a considerable amount of vehicles to that non-summertime travel.

Throughout the three-hour hearing last Wednesday night, planning board members cited instances in which Staszko's representatives failed to meet site plan requirements. Smaller businesses wth less important concerns have come to the planning board more prepared than you, board member Robert Sturdy, stated.

Provisions for electrical and telephone connections to the building were not outlined, they said, along with details for landscaping.

The first debate between the engineers and board members was a change the developer is seeking on the number of required parking spaces. The plan, as presented last week, would include 6.3 parking spaces per 1000 square feet of floor space within the plaza. That is more than the town requirement of four spaces per 1000 feet of shopping area, but equivalent to most area towns, according to Atty. Humphreys. The developer is seeking a variance from the zoning board of appeals regarding the parking spaces.

Fair Oaks resident Jane Repogle expressed her concern that the plaza would severely increase traffic on Sohier Street, particularly during the congestion of the summertime. She was also concerned with the plaza's encroachment upon wetlands situated behind the proposed mall.

Humphreys explained that the developer hired professional engineers to deal with drainage problems on the property, and it was their responsibility to ensure that situation is not altered, or perhaps it will be enhanced.

Currently, the developer has plans before the planning board, conservation commission and zoning board of appeals, pertaining to various issues relating to the proposed plaza.

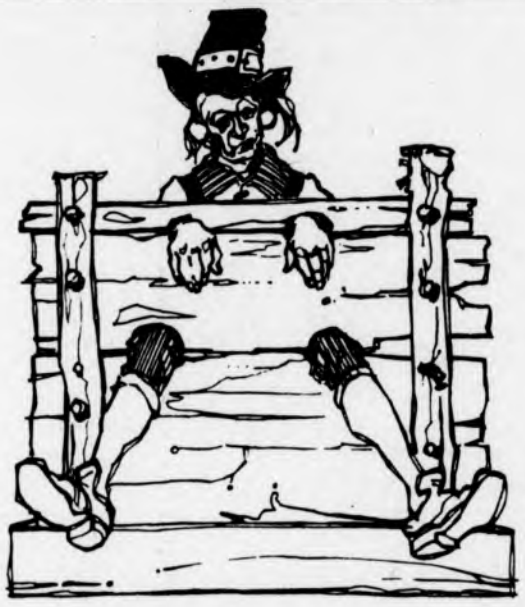
Vol. 6 Issue 7 Spring 1984 Cohasset High School

Is It Working?

In an attempt to combat what seemed to be deliberate student sloppiness in the cafeteria, the administration and Student Council have instituted a policy that will force students to pick up after themselves.

All students must have a tray to go through the line.

No one will be able to select items without a tray.



The student must then pay a 10¢ deposit on the tray.

After this official notice of the ten cent deposit rule was posted, initially many students did not react favorably. According to Mr. Di and the Student Council, however, the new rule seemed to be the best possible solution to the cafeteria's sloppiness problem. This decision had not been a rash one, for the deposit rule had been sucessfully implemented in other schools. The only major difference, in fact, between Cohasset and these other schools is Cohasset's lower deposit cost. But does this policy work in Cohasset?

As a then and now comparison can prove, the lunchroom, although not spotless, can officially be declared less sloppy. Even though no formal inventory of the dimes is taken, the distribution of them does not threaten the success of the policy. While returning deposits, administrators and/or teachers carefully make sure that someone who didn't return a tray doesn't get free dimes. Besides, the vast majority of students would not attempt such an act. If the ratio of trays to dimes does ever differ, the school will most likely benefit by a very slight profit. As a result, so far the "borrow a tray" system seems to work successfully.

Yet, of course, there will always be students who crush cookies and scatter the crumbs all over the tables, as a protest or simply for the fun of it. Without a cost increase, which will be considered at the next Student Council meeting, therefore, the ten cent rule can justifiably remain the same.

Concurrent with this policy, a sign has been appearing throughout the building: "Your mother does not work here. Please pick up after yourself!"

Age Old Problems

By Michael Greiner

There are problems with the discipline at Cohasset High School. Although there are many rules at the school, such as the attendance policy, the smoking rule, and others, they are frequently violated. A particular area with many problems is the gym. Articles of clothing are stolen frequently, and nearly a quarter of all of the lockers are destroyed through vandalism. Furthermore, students are routinely taking advantage of the attendance policy, and Mr. DiGirolamo, Assistant Principal, finds it nearly impossible to enforce the smoking rule.

The state of the gym area troubles the Physical Education Instructors. Mr. Fallon, gym teacher, is particularly concerned when he sees things broken and hears about articles being stolen. He feels that vandalism is currently a "built-in-part of society." Mr. Chatterton, another Physical Education teacher, has a much more optimistic view. Although stealing and vandalism "really bug me," he sees them as age-old problems. He is sure that Cohasset has less of this going on than other schools in the area.

There are also problems with the enforcement of the smoking and attendance policies. Mr. DiGirolamo feels that the attendance policy affects only the serious students. He used the example of a Calculus class, where if a student misses a class, he falls far behind; while if another student decides to skip a less "important" class, all he would have to do is arrive a few minutes late. Because of the problems enforcing the attendance policy, Mr. Chatterton believes that the athletic program suffers. For example, during the last few days before April vacation, nearly 240 students were absent, and this was a week during which several track meets occurred. As for smoking, the rules say that one may smoke behind the school between periods. This edict, however, is routinely violated. The Assistant Principal feels that the main poroblem with the rule's enforcement is that many more girls smoke than boys. Since they often smoke in the girls' restrooms, he is obviously unable to supervise this activity. Boys can also smoke in restricted areas since one person is not able to be everywhere. As Mr. DiGirolamo said, "If I'm not down there, I can't enforce it." This problem arises often since he has many duties to perform.

Mr. DiGirolamo feels that 90% of the students at Cohasset cause no problem, but the other ten percent cause many problems. This portion is very difficult to control. Mr. Fallon and Mr. Chatterton both feel that the Assistant Principal does an excellent job, but he has too many other responsibilities and therefore needs an assistant. Mr. DiGirolamo disagrees; he doesn't think that an assistant would help. All are in agreement, however, that the students should be willing to cooperate with the faculty in finding the violators. Both Mr. Fallon and Mr. Chatterton believe that the students should change their attitudes. As Mr. Fallon said, "They need to police themselves for their own benefit." Thus the responsibility for discipline falls upon the students; since, as the Assistant Principal had asked, "How can you fight silence?"

For Love Of Ivy

By John Kuntz

"What an audience" Gwen whispered to herself.

(What an audience)

The ghostly white faces merged from the darkness—laughing, mocking . . . yet so much like a jury—a black sea of—

. (Somebody hide me . . .)

The stage lights and spotlights shone brightly on one particular point, and it was Gwen's eyes (famous eyes, now) that glistened turquoise in their glare.

(Money cannot buy me . . . the love of Ivy . . .)

"Ivy" Gwen whispered on the stage, "Do your stuff."

(Ivy...)

Ivy cowered on the cool stone precipice. Never before had she had such freedom. Actually to speak the words (the only ones she knew) with an emotion — a feeling never granted to her —

She was free in a physical sense — yet trapped behind steel bars of words and directions that made everything seem abstract when in reality ...

(Somebody hide me — from the love of Ivy ...)

Ivy stood on the ledge of a high building. Sounds of distant city traffic emanated from the darkness. This was the final act of her life.

(short life)

Ivy delivered the first lines of her suicide soliloquy, all the time aware of that presence ... that being whose body contained her

(it was fighting her!)

"Too late" Ivy sighed, although it wasn't one of her lines.

And out in the darkness the spectre audience floated and applauded —

It was a fine last act...

Gwen no longer had control over Ivy. Gwen seemed almost forced from her body — floating around her shell like a lost, maddened fury. She watched Ivy — realizing as she did that Ivy was now a totally separate individual that shared her form.

The play was coming to a close. This was the scene where Ivy died.

The pit orchestra built on the climatic end — the music shrieked: frenzied and dissonant and below, from the darkness, a whispered chant penetrated the cold, night air: Jump ... Jump ... Jump ... Jump ...

(Somebody hide me ... from the love ... from the love ...)

No! Gwen cried, twisting and struggling to break away from the madness, confusion ...

Jump ... Jump ... Jump ... Jump ...

Ivy and Gwen fought for their reality.

"I have to jump ... it was written ... it's all I know ..." Ivy said.

JUMP — JUMP — JUMP — JUMP!

(It's only a play — only a play ...)

"We have to go now" Ivy called. "I can't go alone ..."

Gwen silently agreed, giving in. there was another play going on, her own private play, and —

(It take up all of your time ...)

Jump ... Jump ... Jump ... Jump ...

— and Ivy was someone else.

The audience screamed as darkness swallowed Gwen ...

"Any clue," the reporter questioned as to why someone as successful asGwen Simon would want to kill herself?"

"No idea whatsoever" the uniformed man replied. The ambulance doors slammed with a vault-like thud. Both men jumped. "The Broadway play, For the Love of Ivy, in which Miss Simon starred, ended last week" the reporter continued,"The character she played ..." he suddenly paused, and then went on,"The charcter

C.H.S. International

By Vicki Spooner

This past February, the C.H.S. welcomed Michael Laitta back from his A.F.S. year in Argentina. Michael's year was a wonderful experience filled with new people, places and ideas. "I love Cohasset, but it is important to experience other types of people" Michael admits this statement sums up the feelings he has concerning his A.F.S. year in Argentina.

Michael spent his A.F.S. year in the city of Goya, and for the first part of his experience lived with the Nunez family, a family of five. Michael then moved to the Amaezga family where he lived for the rest of his year in South America. The Amaezgas owned a house in the city of Goya, but also owned a working cattle ranch about 45 minutes away. Gustavo, Michael's host father, was in charge of this ranch, which covered over 10,000 acres and was bigger than the entire town of Cohasset. An especially nice touch to Michael's year was his birthday. The Amaezgas gave him three acres of land, a horse, and a cow — these gifts were so very different from gifts given here in the United States that they became very special to Michael.

Not all of Michael's time was spent at the ranch though. Michael attended an Agricultural and Mathematical School that was run by the Argentinian government. Because of the language barrier, Michael found that, "The first two months were impossible!" At first Michael's favorite class was Math because he could understand what was happening without understanding what the teachers said so quickly in Spanish. Eventually, as the language became easier for Michael to understand, he enjoyed Philosophy and Political Science. Besides all classes being held in Spanish, the hardest adjustment was the school day, which began at seven in the morning and sometimes continued until seven at night. School quickly became a challenge to Michael, because it was there where he worked towards becoming fluent in Spanish. Michael accepted this challenge and worked hard to prove to himself that he could achieve this goal. He began the year at the end of his class, 200th, and by the end of the school year after much hard work, Michael was just about fluent in Spanish, and was tenth in his class.

Through these achievements, Michael learned much about himself. "I learned to talk and be very open...I learned to rely on my own judgements while also asking the opinions of others, and I learned to be happy with what I do." This feeling of self-confidence was central to Michael's experience, and when he returned to Cohasset he concluded that, "Once you put your mind to it, you can really do anything."

Michael also learned much about the country and people who lived in Argentina. First, Argentina is a country of immigrants — a melting pot comparable to the cultural diversity of the United States. His peers were politically aware of not only Argentinian politics, but also world events. From Michael, the Amaezga family and the people of Goya found that not all Americans fit the "rich, arrogant, selfish" stereotype that so often labels us. Michael also discovered that around the world, "People have differences, but they have the same human nature everywhere. The only barriers between peoples are language and politics."

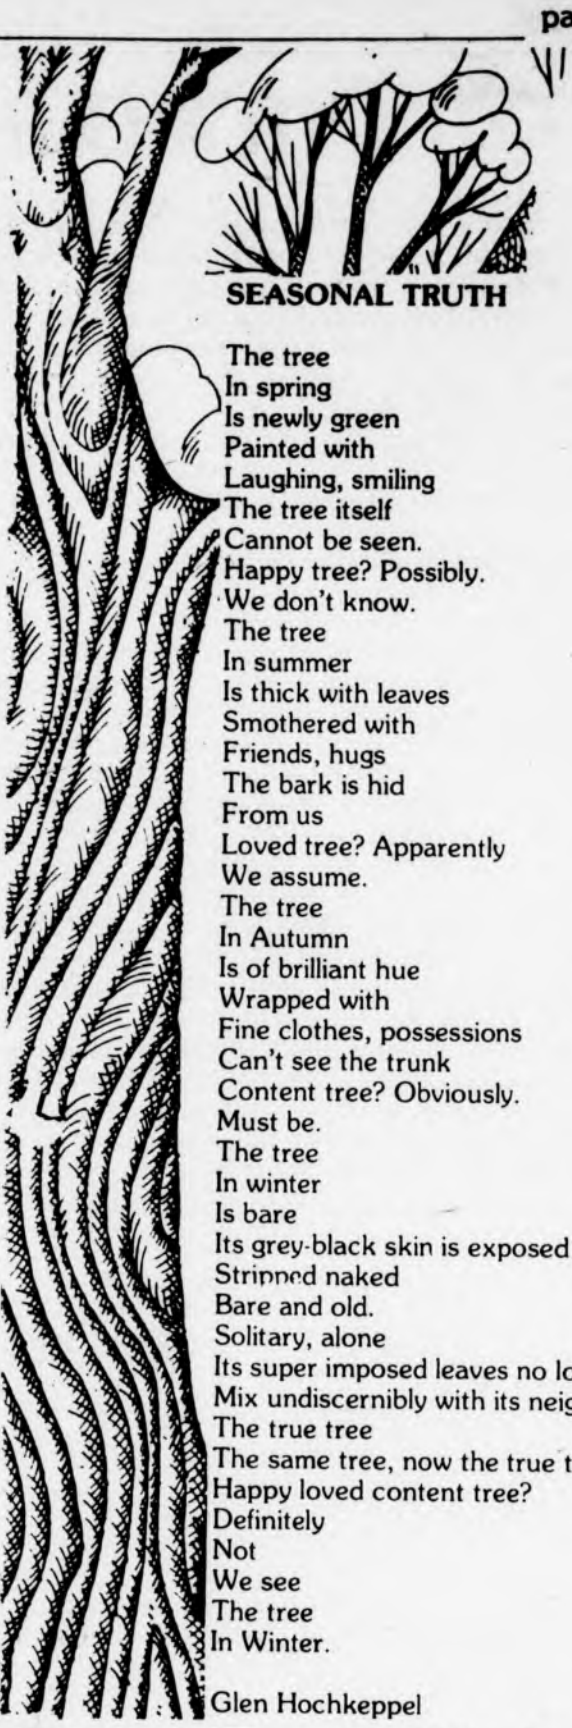
Everything about Michael's year abroad, the customs he encountered, the people he met, and the relationships he built made his year in Argentina one of the most fulfilling experiences of his life. While summing up his feelings about his year abroad, Michael explained that, "Once you experience it, you learn that you have so much more to learn...I know very little about this world." C.H.S. welcomes Michael back and hopes that many others take the challenge to spend a year abroad and experience A.F.S., just as Michael Laitta did.

By Pip Gilmour

It seems that C.H.S. is acquiring quite an international flavor. This is the third year that Cohasset has hosted foreign students; Tui McCarthy came with A.F.S.; Tove Osterling came individually, and Hannamaija Helander came with Rotary International.

This coming July, Lisa Cuff, a tenth grader, will become a Rotary student visiting Japan for one year. She will be living 300 miles northeast of Tokyo with two or three families during her year abroad. The Rotary, unlike some organizations, gave Lisa a choice of countries including Iceland, her second choice, Brazil, Venezuela, Germany, Chile, Santa Domingo, Zimbabwe, and Japan. When asked why she picked Japan, she replied, "If you're going to go somewhere different, it might as well be really different!" Lisa applied to rotary last December, had an interview with the district representative, Mr. Colburn, and was accepted. she has studied French for three years and is now studying her new Japanese workbooks.

Another worldwide organization is A.F.S. This past year, two C.H.S. students lived abroad. This coming summer, three C.H.S. students will be leaving for a summer experience. John Froio, a tenth grader, has been accepted by A.F.S. but does not yet know his destination. His preference is Europe, specifically Italy. John has studied Latin for four years at C.H.S. and hopes that whichever country he may venture to, that his knowledge of Latin will aid him in learning the language of the country.



Jim Martin, a junior, has also been accepted for the summer experience lasting up to ten weeks. His preference is also Europe but no country specifically. Jim is taking AP French this year, and he'd like to use this language abroad. Both John and Jim are waiting daily for their placements.

One applicant already has her placement. Vicki Spooner will spend her summer in Brazil. Like Jim, she is a French AP student, but she is eager to learn Portuguese during her weeks abroad. All three applied to A.F.S. in October and were interviewed locally.

Unlike A.F.S. or Rotary, Youth for America is not nationwide; it deals mainly with the eastern seaboard. Heather Davenport is fortunate enough to be joining Youth for America along with about 200 other students to tour Europe performing concerts. Heather is the first C.H.S. student to make senior district and obtain an All State recommendation. Her trip will begin in July in Frankfort, Germany, and will proceed to Austria, Italy, Switzerland, France, Belgium, England, and Holland. This wonderful expedition will take three and a half weeks. All the students will stay in hotels in the cities that they are all performing in. There will be approximately 100 chorus members, 50 orchestra, and 50 band students all from different schools. Even though it is a short time to tour all of Europe, we're sure that it will be a positive experience.

Along with the C.H.S. students traveling overseas, the school is also fortunate to be receiving a foreign student. On July 27, Maria Alexandria Castro will arrive from Tequcigalpa, the capital of Honduras. She applied to A.F.S. for one year and will be living with the Rossi family. Maria will be 17 and will be a member of the senior class. Before she arrives, Maria will have completed her high school education in Honduras and eventually wants to study engineering. Maria likes to dance, listen to music and loves chocolate. In her free time she plays the guitar, she may join the field hockey team.

Even though C.H.S. is small in comparison to other schools, it seems that it is developing a worldwide campus.

SEASONAL TRUTH

The tree
In spring
Is newly green
Painted with Laughing, smiling
The tree itself
Cannot be seen.
Happy tree? Possibly.
We don't know.
The tree
In summer
Is thick with leaves
Smothered with Friends, hugs
The bark is hid
From us
Loved tree? Apparently
We assume.
The tree
In Autumn
Is of brilliant hue
Wrapped with Fine clothes, possessions
Can't see the trunk
Content tree? Obviously.
Must be.
The tree
In winter
Is bare
Its grey-black skin is exposed Stripped naked
Bare and old.
Solitary, alone
Its super imposed leaves no longer
Mix undiscernibly with its neighbors'
The true tree
The same tree, now the true tree
Happy loved content tree?
Definitely Not
We see
The tree
In Winter.

Girls' Track Update

By Julia Sechen

Coached by Miss Brady, the Girls' Track Team has started a new season. In terms of scores, the team is better balanced than in the past. As opposed to 9 or 10 girls with high scores, the team now has seventeen members with average scores, who contribute to total team points. Many of these talented girls are newcomers to the team. Even though there are no big "stars" as last season, the team expects to win more than half of its meets. The great loss of last year's senior, Karen Ekberg, has affected their expectations. Karen was responsible for many of the points. This year, the league has been enlarged to include three new towns: Scituate, Whitman, and Hanson. They are looking forward to full school support and a good season.

Good luck!

"It's Our Future And Bombs Won't Save It"

The threat of nuclear war continues to grow and cast shadows over the lives of many young people. Acting on this fear, we, a group of Massachusetts students have organized a student rally against nuclear war. Our theme is "It's Our Future and Bombs Won't Save It"; a simple yet important message that conveys our uncertainty about the future.

We all fear nuclear war. That fear is as strong in high school students as it is in anyone. All high school students have been born since nuclear weapons were first used; we are growing up in a world that is constantly threatened by the danger of total destruction. This has become a significant factor in the lives of the young. Many children believe that they will die in a nuclear war. Never before has a generation of Americans had to bear such a burden. This fear may cause young people to lose hope in the future, and as a result, to lose their motivation to succeed. It is devastating to believe that we could be killed by events completely beyond our control. To begin to solve the problem,we must begin to restore hope, to regain hope students must begin to channel their fear into constructive actions. Students must begin to work towards a solution.

This rally will be held on May 12th on Copley Square Plaza at noon. Besides giving high school and junior high students a chance to let their voices be heard, the rally will provide the opportunity to learn more about the issue of nuclear war, and to learn what can be done to bring about a better future. This rally has been conceived, organized, and run by high school students. In the past, students have not had a voice in the decisions that were made about their future, but now we feel an obligation to do our part and let our voices be heard.

The rally is not for just some students; it is for all of us. For it is the future of all of us that is in danger. Students: if you are concerned about this issue we need your support. Please come to the rally. If we all unite to work together on this issue there is no doubt that we can have a clear and positive affect on the future of this nation, and the world. We need your help; our future is at stake.

Our rally will deliver a plea for negotiations, a plea for the governments of the world to make the ending of this insidious nuclear arms race a primary goal. As an organization composed solely of students, perhaps we are not sufficiently acquainted with the minute details of world affairs to recommend a specific pathway to peace. We do know, however, that an overabundance of nuclear weapons poses a distinct threat to the secure future that we deserve. We know further that money wasted on unnecessary weapons is money not spent on building a better future by educating the young. We recognize that if there is to be a prosperous America in the future, then we all must receive a strong education today.

The nuclear arms race poses a great threat to our future. It cannot be ignored. There are many in this generation who recognize the need to strive for a better future, who have not given up. We invite these students to the Massachusetts Students' Rally on May 12th to show that there is still hope for a better future. Together we can deliver a powerful message that will not be ignored.

THINKING ABOUT A SUMMER JOB? THE ARMY RESERVE OFFERS TWO

It's never too early for high school students to start planning for a summer job. One of the options juniors and seniors should consider is a program offered by the Army Reserve, which guarantees a full-time summer job for two years in a row.

Called Split Training, this Army Reserve option lets students 17 or older enroll and take advantage of eight weeks of basic training at full pay during their first summer as an Army Reservist, and their advanced individual skills training during their second summer.

Ordinarily, Army Reservists take basic training and advanced training continuously. This most often takes a minimum of 16 weeks. The special feature of Army Reserve Split Training is that it allows students to undergo training without interfering with school.

The Army Reserve Split Training program, in addition to offering students a full-time job for two summers, provides students with part-time salaried jobs year-round. In the Reserve, members of local units get once-a-month weekend training and two weeks of annual training. Altogether, this service obligation amounts to just 38 days of duty a year.

In addition to the money earned, another major benefit of Army Reserve participation is that members acquire a skill. High school students interested in learning a trade can choose training from more than 300 job specialties, (depending upon the needs of local Reserve units), many of them directly related to civilian occupations.

The college-bound students enrolling under the program can look forward to an extra $4,000 in education assistance, if they qualify for enlistment in certain high-priority unit jobs.

Others signing up for Army Reserve Split Training may be eligible for bonuses of up to $2,000, if they qualify.

Seventeen-year-old high school juniors start their once-a-month weekend meetings with pay three months before summer basic training begins.

Seniors entering the program begin monthly meetings with pay six months before summer basic training begins. College-bound seniors would take advanced training following their freshman semester in college.

For more information, call the local Army Reserve unit. It's listed in the White Pages under "U.S. Government."

McKinnon bids farewell; Hynes hopes to stay

It was the last time Sen. Allan McKinnon would appear before the Scituate League of Women Voters. And last week was just the second time for Rep. Frank Hynes; exactly one year since he talked to the group as a newly-elected state representative.

Sen. McKinnon has decided not to seek re-election to the legislative post he has held for 14 years. During that time, he noted, he came before the Scituate League on numerous occasions "and I have been in agreement with the League 99 percent of the time."

The Weymouth legislator, known throughout his tenure as a reserved man with a warm sense of humor, quipped to his audience that he is not so concerned now with saying the correct thing because "I'm not concerned that my statements will be getting me votes."

Two former teachers, McKinnon and Hynes discussed separate issues they felt were of prime concern to voters and legislators.

McKinnon first discussed the need for an intensive study of the Blue Cross-Blue Shield insurance balanced bill proposal. Weaved throughout his explanation of this subject was his abhorhence of the longtime legislative practice of "subverting the public interest in favor of a particular lobbyist."

McKinnon said state legislators may once again buckle under continued pressure against this proposal, which would ban balanced billing by doctors under the Blue Cross insurance plan.

McKinnon explained that without the ban, it is common practice among some doctors to "bill you whatever they want" for the balance not covered by Blue Cross-Blue Shield. Some physicians have never abused the system, he added, but some do. McKinnon noted, "I don't want a $5000 bill and be at the mercy of the doctor."

Some doctors have argued that patients can "shop around" for a preferred physician, "but most of us do not have the time to shop around. We go to one, and that's it," McKinnon said.

McKinnon said there are valid arguments pro and con regarding this proposal, and it is his advice that a serious investigation of the issue be initiated.

Rep. Hynes, directing his first thoughts to be the subject of special interest lobbying, said this is an issue which will receive widespread discussion during the next year. The freshman legislator is taking a bold stand in opposing the current House leadership, and is working "for a major change" against the House Speaker.

Den 1—Thanks to Marie Buckley for arranging the Bicycle Safety Clinic with Cohasset Cyclesports. The Cubs all got great bike tune-ups and some super safety tips from Dave and Lee. What an awesome demo-bike they had set up! And the ice cream cones afterward at Strawberry Parfait were good too.

Unit 6 in the Wolf Book provided a theme for the March Kite Flying meeting. The Cubs read the safety unit, made paper bag kites, and flew them at the Little League Field.

The following week Den 1 made Jumping Jacks from patterns in a book on Antique toys. They then presented skits in groups of three, to the delight of the Del Leaders and all.

Den 2— Pot Luck Gardening using household foods such as carrots, beets, garlic cloves, lentils and herb seeds provided a spring kick-off activity for the den. They boys spent a diligent two weeks constructing kites to earn Wolf Arrow points. They also earned arrow points as they learned how to draw and read treasure maps. In preparation for Olympic Night, the Den held its own Field Day.

Den 3— The Cubs from Den 3 participated in the very exciting annual Pinewood Derby on March 28. Brian Buckley placed 1st for the 9 years olds & went on to become the Pack 38 Champion. On April 14, Brian participated in the Old Mills District Finals in which 10 towns are members. Brian won 3rd place in the 9 year olds & very happily went home with a trophy signifying his winning.

The boys have eagerly worked to finish their Wolf achievements and Arrow requirements. They spent part of one meeting picking up trash in the yard of the Community Center where they usually have their meetings.

Den 3 also arranged for Dave Singer, Manager of Cyclesports of Cohasset to hold a Bicycle Safety Clinic. Cubs in Dens 1, 2 & 3 attended this very informative and enjoyable program.

The last Den meeting for the year was a Bowling Party at the Community Center in celebration of a very successful first year in Scouting. A great time was had by all!

Den 4— Chris Bartow, Mac Campbell, Dan Curtin, Dan DeMichele, Chip Kennedy & Brett Picton-Quinn will all receive their Gold Arrow & at least 2 Silver Arrows. They complete their photography, masks & skies badges at their Den Meetings. During the month of April they completed their weather & aircraft badges. Den 4 could not have done so well if it were not for the help of Den Chief Michael LeLecas. Thank You, Michael!

Future News-- The Pack will march again this year as a group in the Memorial Day Parade on May 28. The cubs should meet in the Osgood School parking lot in complete uniform at 10 a.m. We will pick up the parade there and march to the Memorial at the Harbor. Hopefully we will have better weather this year.

Attorney Michael Puzo attended the meeting, representing abutter Jane Cook. He was assisted by an engineer and traffic consultant. He questioned Staszko's engineers about the hours of the stores' operation, if the truck access on Sohier Street is crucial to the plans, and whether the actual parking area is more substantial than it appeared in the presentation made by the Staszko engineers.

The meeting heated up a bit when Sturdy accused the engineers of coming to the board with inconsistent plans. He labeled it "misleading and inaccurate to have five sheets (locating) drainage with the wetlands at a different site on each sheet."

Atty. Humphreys said there was no attempt to mislead anyone, and the discrepancies were minor and designed for the attention of several other town boards.

After the board decided to halt the proceedings and schedule a continuation, it was determined they would have 21 days after May 23 to file a decision.

Board member Sturdy reminded the developer that "we do not wish that Route 3A continues to be as bad as it is. But this site is at the corner of a residential neighborhood. We want you to look at the esthetics of Cohasset. It is up to us to make sure harmony with the site is maintained,"he added.

Rousseau's definition of happiness includes a good bank account, a good cook and a good digestion. Inflation is causing our food dollar to buy less and less, but, nothing daunted, a good cook can still please her family with economical menus if every once in a while they include something a little special such as Monica East's

LEMON CURD COCONUT BARS

In a large bowl combine 3½ oz. (1½ c.) grated sweetened coconut
1 c. flour
1 stick cold butter, cut into bits
1/4 c. sugar
Blend mixture until it resembles meal. Press the dough into a well buttered 8" sq. baking pan and bake in 350 oven for 15 min., or until it is golden. While above is baking, in a bowl beat:
3 eggs
1 c. sugar
1/3 c. lemon juice
1T each grated lemon rind and flour
1/8 tsp. salt
Combine these ingredients well, pour mixture over the baked layer and bake in 350 oven for 25 min., or until golden brown. Sift confectioners' sugar evenly over top, let cool and with a serrated knife cut into 2 x 1" bars. Makes 32 cookies.

Over-sized servings of food are all too common in our land of plenty. Cutting down on waste by careful menu planning is another way to fight spiraling food costs. Inflation affects restaurants the same way it does our food budget and, of course, is reflected in rising costs passed along to the consumer. No matter where you go to eat out though, the restaurants are crowded nowadays with diners who enjoy a pleasing ambience, sometimes costly for the owners who provide a decor of flowers, plants, attractive lines, china and crystal. A newly renovated Washington hotel spends $10,000 each month, just for the floral decorations. A very special place in Sudbury welcomed members of the Seaside Gardeners after they toured the Wild Flower Gardens in Framingham this week. Featured on the menu at the Wayside Inn is this

WAYSIDE INN DUCKLING IN ORANGE SAUCE

Duck—2 dressed ducklings, 4½ lbs. each.
Remove giblets. Cut off second joint of wings and remove neck skin of duck. Roast ducklings at 450 degrees for 1¼ to 1¾ hours. Cool to room temp. Remove back bone and cut each duckling into two portions. Remove breast and thigh bones. Just before serving, place duck in a baking dish; bake at 450 degrees for 6 to 10 min., or until skin is crisp. Serve with:

ORANGE SAUCE

2 c. currant jelly
1/2 c. white vinegar
1/2 c. each thawed orange juice concentrate, chicken stock and brown gravy
Juice of 1 lemon
1 orange
1 T. Grand Marnier, optional
Melt jelly in heavy saucepan for 15 min. Stir in next five ingredients. Simmer 10 min. Peel orange and cut into narrow strips. Boil in water for 3 min. Drain peel and add to sauce. Cut remaining orange into small pieces. Add to sauce. Spoon sauce over duck; garnish with orange slices. If desired, pour Grand Marnier over duckling and flame before serving. Yield: 4 servings.

It used to be that a heaping dish of food pleased most customers, but now chefs, like baseball players, demand generous salaries, for artistic, gourmet dishes. Is it any wonder that the average check for one diner at LaCaravelle in New York is one hundred dollars? At those prices, some of us would have to settle for just a cup of chowder at Boston's Ritz Carlton Hotel which serves this

CLAM CHOWDER

36 medium-sized soft shelled clams
4 c. water
3T chopped salt pork
1/2 c. finely diced onion
2T all-purpose flour
1½ c. diced potatoes
1½ tsp. salt, ¼ tsp. pepper
1 c. each half and half cream and milk, scaled
Scrub clams, heat to boiling in a Dutch oven. Reduce heat, simmer for 10 min. Drain and reserve clams. Let broth stand and keep hot. Render salt pork in soup kettle; add onions and cook until soft. Stir in flour; cook 2 min., stirring. Add broth, stirring until mixture boils. Add potatoes. Cover and cook over medium-low heat for 30 min., or until potatoes are done. Open clams, remove stomachs and place clams in cold water. Place stomachs in separate bowl of cold water to soak. Remove clams and chop. Stir into chowder. Season with salt and pepper. Stir in milk, cream and drained stomachs. Heat and serve with pilot or common crackers.

Angler's corner

By George Doucette

A sure way to tell if spring is really here is to check the fish being weighed in at your local tackle shop.

When you see cod 42 lbs., 12 lb. tautog (Fred Alger) flounder, pollack, and other salt water species being weighed in on a regular basis, you can take the cover off the boat or dust off your surf rod.

Head for Quincy, Duxbury, Scituate, Marshfield, Plymouth and other favorite spring shore spots to fill up the cooler. It's a little chilly out there and you don't have the parade of summer boaters and bathers to watch, but you know that winter is over and that's all that should matter.

Best bet for cod is clams and jigs. And flounder will take seaworms (or night crawlers in a pinch). Pollack are a game fighter when caught on mackeral jig Xmas trees. All up and down the coast, from Boston to Provincetown, the hearty salt water anglers are cashing in on a flurry of spring fishing.

Fresh water enthusiasts are having a great spring for trout, thanks to the boys at the Sandwich hatchery. Plymouth County and the Cape lakes and ponds are enjoying good trout fishing.

Trout are really taking worms, lures, salmon eggs, corn and flies in many ponds within a short drive of your front door.

Bass and pickerel are a little slow yet, but if you are willing to put in the time, you may be rewarded with 8 lb. largemouths like the one Harry Koblantz caught. Rubber worms, jigs, and swimming minnow lures are your best artificials. Shiners and chubs are also accounting for a good deal of 2 to 4 lb. fish. If you enjoy the peace and quiet of a clear lake or a soft rolling ocean, the spring is the time for you, while the summer fishing buffs are still home on the weekends fixing up the yard.

One final note: shad, one of the feistiest species in local waters, are now making their annual pilgrimage up the North and South Rivers. Go after them on an incoming tide (evening is best) with a fly rod or a shad dart on light spinning gear. They are worth the trip.

Next week: tips for spring stripers.

McKinnon & Hynes talk shop

The former Marshfield selectman said there is also an opportunity now "to change the way the Massachusetts legislature does its business - hopefully with fewer special interests."

Another issue which has gained some notoriety is House Bill 5000, the education reform bill. Now in redraft form, this proposed legislation has 'excited" the former high school guidance counselor. Rep. Hynes noted that although the redraft is better than the original, there is still some fine tuning to be completed.

The major portions of the bill, he said, include comprehensive curriculum planning in every school district, involving teachers, parents and school administrators. Hynes called this step "a tremendous challenge to our local communities."

The second portion of the bill will mandate provisions for developing programs for the school system's talented and gifted students. This is an area which has been overlooked or underdeveloped because of the financial restrictions of Proposition 2 1/2, he added.

A third section of the legislation would require standardized statewide basic skills testing before the fifth grade, during the fifth grade, and at the seventh grade, he explained. There would be a provision for early retirement for teachers with thirty years of experience at age 55. And all teachers would be paid a minimum $18,000 for their first year in the school system. How the more experienced instructors with advanced degrees would be paid, is a problem that has to be solved before the education package is approved, Hynes explained.

The finances of this plan, he added, would be a burden placed on the state, since it is a state-proposed legislation to be funded after Proposition 2 1/2.

Hynes endorses the redraft of this bill, mindful that more revisions must be developed if it is to be aproved. According to the legislator who is about to undertake a re-election campaign, the education reform package addresses the child who often slips through the cracks of public education - the average child who demands little attention from the system.

When asked where the bulk of this expensive proposal will come, Hynes replied that funding would have to come from the state although that will be the most controversial aspect of the bill. When 6000 Massachusetts teachers are now receiving less than $18,000, then higher salaries will have a ripple effect on collective bargaining in local communities, he said.

"If I were a teacher with post graduate degrees, I would demand my union negotiator seek a greater salary for me, than those just coming into the system," he said. On the other hand, school systems must attempt to attract the most competent professionals for their school. This won't be accomplished without offering these men and women attractive salaries, Hynes said.

One League member noted that the state does not have an equitable system for distributing funds to local municipalities. Rather, Cathleen Everett said, it is often a case of which legislator from what district is lobbying for the most money. The poorer communities, most in need of assistance, are often the areas which receive the least amount of state funding. Although the reform bill is a good concept, if it is not approved without appropriate methods to fund it, there will be confusion, she said.

There is a revision in the proposal now, Hynes said, that would require all municipalities to identify revenues and needs of the local school systems. He agreed it is a proper concern for all school systems to address, because all systems must be primarily concerned with "a fair and equitable distribution of money for the education of our children," he said.

Those communities which strive to provide the best education, and the most innovative educational programs, will be financially rewarded from the state, he added. There is the probability of increased aid if a system is striving for better education.

When asked by an audience member what most surprised him when he first entered the state legislature a year ago, Hynes replied, "the way in which House members are concerned with their self-enhancement and self interest."

Recalling an incident when he sent back a campaign contribution from the House Speaker Thomas Magee, Hynes said he has committed himself to "addressing issues based on their merit, and not in terms of self interest."

Selective two-state sojourn on a 'secret' mission

By Lois Martin

It wasn't a big deal if you measure it in comparison to Jamaica or Alcapulco or Ireland. But my little vacation trip was a fresh experience and a success for several reasons.

For one thing I got where I was going and back safely. I accomplished my mission. I found everything I was looking for, after a fashion and with a corps of directors.

I guess I don't rate as a four star traveler if I made it to Greenwich, Connecticut and the environing New York region. But I hadn't done that before.

PATCHES

I had a pre-marked map, courtesy of someone who reads those things. And I, along with my fellow truckers, used up a lot of routes before reaching my first destination, just inside Connecticut from the New York side.

My mission. I went to that area because it's the family of a male person who gets to plan a rehearsal dinner. However, I don't get to say any more than that, because it's the family of the female who does the announcing. Far be it from me to take it upon myself to usurp that privilege. And I trust this hint will go no further.

Anyway, I was in the good part of those two states. I had been forewarned that everything there was expensive so I might be lucky if I could contrive a menu of hash and gingerbread.

Unperturbed I started looking for hotels/motels. I'll tell you they aren't easy to find. All I could see in Harrison, Rye and Purchase, New York were world headquarters of everything. The new General Foods place is comparable in size if not design to the Taj Mahal.

And it was in that time span that I developed a ritual that was responsible for my finding things. Daniel Boone once quipped that he'd never been lost but he was once confused for three days. I was confused regularly. But as often as I was lost, I was found by a network of people to whom I owe a lot.

There's a knack in asking for directions. If you don't do it right, they won't give them to you. First, look and act in keeping with what you appear to be. In my case, I presented myself as one pleasant but entirely bewildered woman. And I stuck with that image. If you're annoyed or ugly about being lost, they refuse to be entrapped by your foul disposition. If you're lofty, they'll lie to you. And if you burst into tears, they report you as being unstable.

I told them the truth. "I need to find thus-and-so," I'd tell them right out straight. "And I don't have the foggiest idea where I am, let alone how to get there."

They like candor, those gas station men, delivery men, maintenance grounds keepers, security guards and police officers.

There's one other catch. If they don't think you're serious about following finite directions, they won't bother to go through them. I got to be sharp as a tack.....so many lights down, turn right, curve left by whatever marking, then straight ahead. The only direction-giver that made me nervous was one who said, "You can't miss it."

Eventually my 'found' friends developed an above ground network. Sam at Texaco sent me the easy way three miles toward my destination where I was to stop at the Mobil on the corner and tell Mike Sam said he was to give me directions for the rest of the way so I wouldn't get lost...again.

The security guard at General Foods held up the traffic for me until I could get out of the lot and across the street to the Rye Town Hilton. That place was booked for Nov. 23 with a five day Kosher convention. The Arrowwood had prices that started with $36 per person for chicken so I bowed and scraped my way out their door. And I tossed away another option because the people who planned things like rehearsal dinners were taciturn and liltless. I wanted to find a place with people who have predominant characteristics of verve and life. In short, I judged the quality of the food and lodging by the people who talked with me in those rarified establishments. If they didn't have warmth, verve and naturalness, I crossed them off my list. I get to choose the spirit of the event about which I can comment no further. And I choose festivity and celebration with good food and cheerful people.

So I settled on the Ramada Inn in Armonk, N. Y. There a woman, who used to live near here, handled my business with natural elan. We picked out a menu that sounds good. She'll do the flowers and the linens. Sounds good.

That done, I headed north on New York's 684 to get to visit Andy who's in Pittsfield with GE. That section of New York has silos for skyscrapers, corn cribs for convenience and lolling hills in which the fog loiters in the morning. Pretty, pleasing. True I checked every road sign to make sure I was heading the right direction.

Andy's was the first apartment I've seen that belongs to a son. He has a paucity of clutter. His home is neatly arranged. And I was accorded the bed because I was an honored guest. Further I got to tell him that.I'd visited briefly with Meghan, a fine young woman with navy blue eyes, and her family briefly in Greenwich. But of course I can't go into that.

I got home and bailed Lilly out of the kennel (day camp) and reviewed my victory. Home, dinner arranged, new friends found because they kept finding me.

And if you decide to take a trip out that way, give me a call. You can use my map and my network of directors. I've saved the maps they drew for me and you'll enjoy meeting Sam and Mike. Tell them I sent you. They may get pale for a minute but they'll 'find' you.

Conservatory Fair should be marked on calendars

By Patricia Desmond

Clip and save this story so you will remember to wend your way to the annual Cedar Hill Fair in Hingham when it comes round again next May.

If fairs were reviewed, the Friends of the South Shore Conservatory would win a quadruple A rating or perhaps four stars - however you would care to look at it.

My son, Timothy, who is five, happens to look at it as more fun than watching "He-Man" on TV. And if you'd ever seen Tim on a day when he missed "He-Man" because of something on my schedule, you could understand what a supreme compliment that happens to be.

(You might liken a five-year-old's fascination with "He-Man" to the hold Michael Jackson seems to have on slightly older people).

What Tim liked best at the fair was the lollipop board. For a quarter, you could pick your choice from a pegboard of many colors—with the chance of winning something more and special besides the lollipop.

Well, Tim would pay 25 cents for a lollipop anyway. But he loved getting a strip of three stickers just for playing along.

(His stickers are now firmly pasted to the wallpaper in his bedroom where they can reside along with small sticky pieces of Smurf, plastic Mr. T stick-ons, and other assorted lessons in early consumerism).

I happened to like listening to the very good music provided by the Conservatory. Tim said the music was okay. He wondered if anyone there could do "Beat It."

Since we didn't happen to catch the full range of performing events, I don't want to rate the ones we did see and possibly do injustice to another fine group. The series of events went from 11:30 to 2 p.m. with intermissions for setting up.

The performers included the Doug Wauchope Ensemble, the famous Kinderchor, the ever-excellent Shoestring Players, the Ed Sorrentino Ensemble and the John Knight Ensemble.

Stephanie Perkinson sports the paper crown she made at the SS Conservatory's May Fair for her mother, Pat and for Nancy Platner.

The piano auction also attracted a good sized crowd of onlookers. In fact, for a grey chilly day, the turn-out for the fair was little short of incredible.

The fire engine ride, for only one small quarter, was particularly wonderful. I think I liked the siren as much as Tim liked the chance to pretend he was on his way to a real conflagration somewhere deep in the Ammunition Depot.

The free rides in the open Army Jeep from the car parking space to the top of Cedar Hill are something to appreciate. After all, what can you get for free these days?

This year there were horse and pony rides, run by Tanya Stein, assisted by Allison Smith, and somewhat looked after by George Stein. Both the pony and the horse were gentle and friendly.

Cathy Salisbury did a great job filling helium balloons. Tim decided almost as soon as he got his that he wanted to let it go free.

"They're supposed to go free when you've used them," he told me later. "So they can get some fun, too."

Well, his green balloon is probably having a fascinating trip to Spain by now. Maybe I should have held on for the ride . . .

The usual group of games was available for fair-goers. Toss the bean bags into the holes in the bear. Heave the wet sponge at the person's face. Spin art. Cookie making. Grab for toys in the elephants nose. Fish for stickers in the wading pool.

The Friends, led by Barbara Bliss, of Cohasset, deserve a round of applause for a fair well run. And don't forget to put it on your calendar for the first Saturday in May of 1985.

Conservatory piano faculty to perform Saturday

Two members of the South Shore Conservatory piano faculty will share a concert of classical and jazz music Saturday, May 12 at 8 p.m. at the Conservatory in Hingham.

The pianists, both professionals, will play solos of music by Bach, Prokofiev and Mussorgsky. As a special feature of the program, they will play a two piano arrangement of "Points on Jazz" by Dave Brubeck. The concert is free and open to the public.

Elizabeth Reed was born in Lisbon, Portugal. When she was a little girl her family moved to Arlington. Her first piano lessons were with her mother, Irene Reed, now a well known teacher in Arlington. She then worked with Vera Gorovitz and attended Boston University where she studied with Edith Stearns and received both her undergraduate and Masters degrees in Piano Performance. On a Rotary Fellowship she traveled to Austria for further piano study at the Mozarteum. Reed has performed as soloist, accompanist and with many chamber music groups.

Kallin Johnson is a native of Utah, graduating with a B.A. in Music and French from Utah State University. After coming to Boston he attended the New England Conservatory where he received a Masters in Music and studied under Jacob Maxim and Jean Stackhouse. He has won many awards for his playing in his native state and a scholarship to the New England Conservatory. Johnson has performed as soloist and accompanist and is also an accomplished jazz pianist.

The Conservatory in Hingham is off 19 Fort Hill Street in the former Naval Ammunition Depot. It is funded, in part, by the Mass. Council on the Arts and Humanities.

OVER 55 and thinking of selling your home? We have a brochure available that details information regarding a once-in-a-lifetime capital gains tax exemption of up to $100,000 on the sale of your home. The brochure is prepared by our RELO group and is available in all offices or by writing to us at 183 Columbia Road, Hanover, Ma 02339.

ADVANTAGES OF HOME OWNERSHIP. We can come up with 8 good reasons for buying a home. Maybe you can add to the list. 1. Economic security knowing your home is saftguarded against inflation. 2. Investing in your home rather than paying rent bills. 3. Tax Advantages with certain deductions. 4. Financial Independence. 5. Credit Record. 6. Environment. You can live in the neighborhood of your choice. 7. Cash Equity. 8. Satisfaction in the knowledge that you own property, a place of your own.

BUY DOWN is becoming a popular word in home mortgages according to Isabel Dole and Ellie Cabral of Northern Mortgage. A buy down is just that, the borrower is actually buying a lower rate in the first three years of the mortgage so that the payments start at a lesser amount. The other big advantage is that the borrower's ability to pay is figured on the lower rate. This means he/she can comfortable borrow more money.

HERE'S HOW IT WORKS. Say the current conventional rate is 14%. The borrower qualifies and makes payments the first year based on a 11% rate. The second year the rate goes to 12%, the third year 13% and the fourth and final years at 14%. At the time the loan is made the buyer must have a least a 10% down payment. 5% of the amount would be applied to the selling price so the buying is asking for a 95% morgage loan. The other 5% is placed in the bank and drawn upon during the first three years to pay the difference in the two rates.

HAVE MORE QUESTIONS? Call Northern in Norwell at 871-4301. One of their mortgage consultants would be happy to explain this and other financing programs.

THE BACKYARD EXPLORER, a service of the Plymouth County Development Council, suggests that this week you find our about the many whale watch cruises that are available from several ports in Plymouth County. For free brochures call the Council at 826-3136.

Challenger Golden appeals recount defeat

By Jane Lane

An appeal of the election recount was filed last Friday in Dedham Superior Court by selectman challenger Doris Golden. Although she was thwarted in her attempt to unseat incumbent Mary Jane McArthur, the battle is not over.

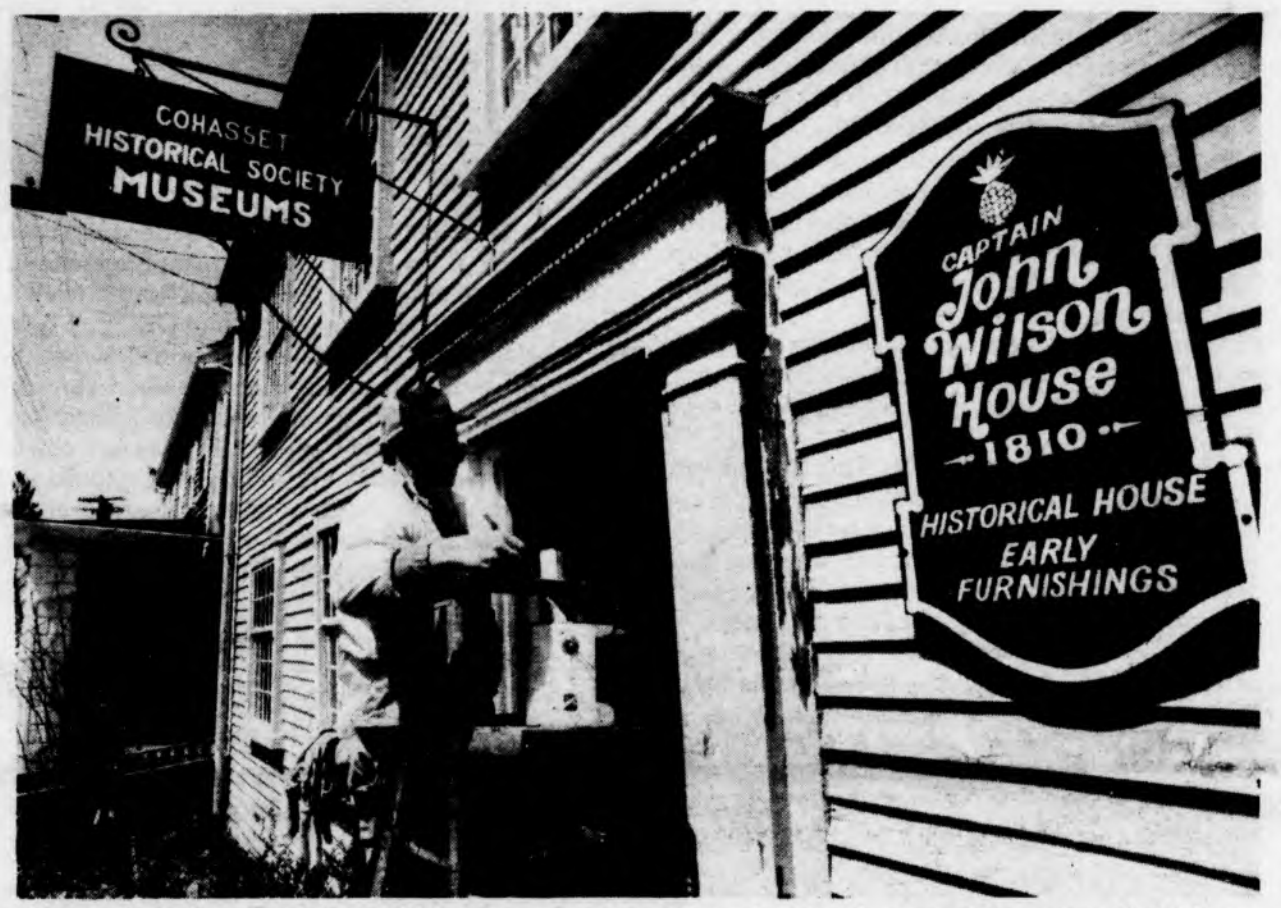
A court hearing is scheduled for 9:30 a.m. tommorrow, and a trial date will be set then. Motions will be filed by Golden's attorney, William McDermott, and Town Counsel Richard Henderson, who will represent the defendants, the Cohasset Board of Registrars.

According to Henderson, lengthy preparation, motions and responses which must be filed by the town in response to the complaint, are intricate and time-consuming.

Emphasizing the town counsel represents the town, and no particular political party or candidate, Henderson said he will appear in Superior Court Friday morning.

Using a conservative figure, Henderson estimates it will cost the town approximately $1500 - $2500 in legal fees if the appeal goes to trial. Litigation is a costly process, he explains, much like a physician performing surgery.

If a judge decides the recount null and void, as requested in the complaint filed by Golden, a special election will be scheduled which would add to the town's expenses.



McDermott, a veteran of election appeal cases, said his client had no other recourse but to contest the election through the judicial system. Noting that ballot counting in any election is a subjective process, McDermott said a judge will base his decision on legal fact and precedent. Utilizing election case law in Massachusetts and other states, a judge will determine the status of the contested ballots, he adds.

The Boston attorney does not see how an appeal by the challenger will cost her votes, should a special election be scheduled. "It's her right under the law to seek this appeal, and I think the voters of Cohasset are very interested in determining the results of their actions," he says.

Both attorneys agree a trial date should be quickly decided, with the actual motions and arguments concluding after one or two days.

In the court complaint against the four members of the Board of Registars, Golden alleges substantial violations of federal, state and town law during the town election, including: the failure to deliver absentee ballots to registered voters; the registars, in direct violation of state law, allowed McArthur to remain inside the town hall voting area where she greeted voters; the failure to count one absentee ballot; defective allot boxes were used; and the failure to seal the ballot box containers immediately following the election.

Sailing is more than a hobby for the Langfords

Sailing. Perhaps nothing on earth approaches the peace one may find during a calm sail across smooth water.

The Langfords of Black Horse Lane have become addicted to this familial form of recreation, and talk about their love for the sport with true enthusiasm.

Now, Spencer Langford, who learned to sail alongside his wife and children, will put his devotion to the test. He will sail alone from Plymouth, England across the unpredictable Atlantic to Newport, R.I.

Aboard his 38-foot Shannon, Spencer will participate in the OSTAR (The Observer Singlehanded TransAtlantic Race). Although he and his wife and three children have completed this sometimes treacherous passage before, Spencer will be making this voyage alone.

It's difficult for a landlubber to imagine the magnitude of that task. But while Spencer and Dale are busy in South England making final preparations for his trip, his daughter, Virginia, talks about the incredible journey her father is about to undertake.

Within their Cohasset home, Virginia vicariously lives the adventure her father is set to begin. Like her parents and two brothers, she understands the inherent dangers, but in her mind they are far outdistanced by the majesty of sailing the Atlantic.

It will take a month or more for her father to complete the crossing, although prevailing winds, currents and weather conditions will affect what course he sets. This is not an extraordinarily long journey for Spencer, who recently sailed for 18 days with his family from Bermuda to the Azores. The family also spent 22 days on the ocean when they sailed from the Canary Islands to Barbados.

The task he is about to begin is all the more challenging when one considers that Spencer learned to sail as an adult, along with his children and wife. As Virginia explains, "my parents were looking for a hobby the entire family could be involved in, and they thought sailing would be perfect. So they bought a boat and we all learned to sail. And like anything, the more we practiced, the better we became."

All this occurred while the Langfords were living in England. An insurance salesman, Spencer had been transferred there. Although he grew up near a lake in Albany, N.Y., he had never sailed on the ocean. They purchased a 30-foot boat, and their adventures began.

And when the family was set to leave England to

A marvelous metamorphosis

By David Warren

The transformation is almost complete. Upstairs, where servants were once quartered, accountants and tax attorneys busily ponder finances.

Downstairs, President Paul Montle has settled into the former library, while a visiting consultant talks his trade in a guest office, formerly the trophy room.

The $1 million estate of late Dow Jones publishing heiress Jessie Bancroft Cox is now in the final stages of metamorphosis, and will soon shed the cacoon of its aristocratic past and emerge as a showplace for its new tenant, Yankee Oil and Gas.

There is much different and much the same about the Cox estate, built in 1932 as a wedding present to Jessie from her father.

The outside grounds, per order of the town, remain visually the same. Yankee has laid down a new water main and has brought in a few thousand dollars in shrubs to spruce up the front yard, but those are the only changes.

On the interior side, however, there have been changes galore. Jessie would probably still recognize the place, for many natural features have been retained, but there is a whole new look about the estate.

The process of refurbishing the interior was not just a matter of bringing in a few desks, file cabinets and swivel chairs. Hardly. In creating a company headquarters, Yankee bypassed traditional office decor and made the conversion from from estate to working environment without losing the building's splendor and elegance.

They were able to acheive this effect by highlighting some of the estates inherent features instead of hiding or overpowering them. For example, the seven working fireplaces have been cleaned out by chimney sweeps and are sure to be prominent fixtures come the winter months.

Magnificent wood and marble floors remain magnificent, as they have been polished and waxed (some extensively repaired) rather than covered over with plush wall-to-wall carpeting. All that covers these floors are handsome oriental rugs, which do not detract from, but add to, the essence projected by the floors.

The atmosphere has been further retained, even enhanced, by what Yankee has brought into the estate. When workers first began the conversion process in mid-January, every room was bare; the only piece of furniture left behind by the Cox heirs was an old silverware chest.

Charged with the task of furnishing the building

Notice to mooring owners

Mooring fees are due and payable by June 1st of each calendar year. Failure to pay the fee on time is cause for mooring tackle to be removed from the harbor at owner's expense and the mooring space will be reassigned to persons on the waiting list.

It is unlawful to place a boat of larger size on a mooring without permission of the harbormaster. The only boat that can be attached to a mooring is the boat registered and on file with the harbormaster.

Failure to comply with the mooring regulations of the harbor will automatically terminate mooring space assignments.

Waste collection date set

The Hazardous Waste Collection Day has been scheduled for September 22. The collection had to be defered until the fall because SCA, the contractor who will perform the collection, was unavailable until after Labor Day.

Residents of Cohasset are urged to save any material such as paints, solvents and pesticides for the collection. Hazardous Material Advisory Committee Chairman, Jeff Bettinger told the Board of Selectmen "SCA would not schedule a collection day until we had the funding approved, but by the time we approved the funds, (at the April Town Meeting), they (SCA) were booked until Memorial Day. Past experience has show SCA that collections held between Memorial and Labor Day are not effective, therefore we will have to wait until September to have ours."

The Hazardous Material Advisory Committee will be discussing this event at a meeting May 17 at 7:30 p.m. The open meeting will be held at the Water Dept., King Street.

Boswell may appeal finding Firefighter John T. Boswell III, who was suspended last November for six weeks without pay, has lost an appeal of that decision to the Civil Service Commission.

Represented by union attorney James Grady, Boswell appealed selectmen's verdict of a six-week suspension without pay. That suspension took place for thirty working days in December and January.

The firefighter was suspended because he worked a part-time job while he was out on paid injury leave from the Cohasset Fire Department. October 17, Chief Dooley found Boswell working at a Norwood print shop at the same time he was receiving injury benefits from the fire department.

The chief recommended selectmen fire the nine-year veteran of the fire department, but they denied that request and placed Boswell on immediate suspension without pay or benefits.

Boswell was to meet with his attorney to discuss whether the appeal will be taken to Dedham Superior Court. Currently, there is a civil complaint lodged against the town by a group of residents who allege that selectmen and Chief Dooley held an unauthorized executive session to discuss the Boswell suspension.

That complaint, signed by a citizens' petition, was filed in Superior Court in late October and has yet to be heard. The citizens allege that selectmen were in violation of the open meeting laws during a closed session in which they predetermined the suspension of firefighter Boswell.

The firefighter said he has until May 20 to file an appeal of the Civil Service decision, but there are many factors to consider, including the fate of the citizens' petition.

Pollution study contract

The Water Commission this week awarded a $35,000 contract to an engineering firm to determine whether the town's water supply is being contaminated by ground water flow from Cohasset Heights landfill.

No determination has been made and no conclusions will be reached until the study by the engineering firm of Camp, Dresser and McKee is completed. Water Commissioners, who were authorised by town meeting to award the contract, hope the report can be finished within 60 days. They intend to sit down with the engineers within the next two weeks to discuss completion of the in-depth study.

According to commissioner Peter Pratt, the scope of the study will be defined during that meeting, with a requirement of three or four groups of tasks to be performed by the engineers.

As Pratt emphasized, the commissioners are not going into this study with a preconceived notion that there is a definite pollution factor from Cohasset Heights. Rather, he said, it will be an investigation to insure there is no problem in that privately-owned property. Results of the study will be forwarded to the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering. If pollutants are found in the surface water from the landfill, it will be the responsibility of DEQE to deny a third site assignment permit to the landfill owners.

Another item the commissioners talked about this week was the need for a committee to study the formation of a watershed protection area in Cohasset. Because the town's watershed borders on four towns, including Hingham, Scituate and Norwell, there is a great need to define the area and evaluate its future use. The commission will work with selectmen to appoint the study committee within three weeks. The watershed protection area must be analyzed, Pratt said, in order to protect Cohasset's ground and surface water supplies, mindful of the future development of the town.

New Inspector appointed

Edward A. J. Poskus

Edward A.J. Poskus of Brockton topped 19 applicants, and was appointed Building Inspector by selectmen last week.

The recommended choice of Executive Secretary Mark Lanza, Poskus, 63, is an architect who is winding down his practicing partnership in an architecture-engineering company.

His love for the construction industry spurred his interest in applying for the position vacated last week by Robert Dennis. Since his first day in Cohasset more than a week ago , Poskus said the building department has been "quite busy - actually extremely busy." The Brockton resident said that was expected when he accepted the position.

Lanza said the architect was his first choice for the inspector's job which will pay $20,145 until a pay increase of $3500 is effective July l. "His combination of architecture and engineering expertise and experience, and his extensive knowledge of municipal zoning is what made him my first choice. Mr. Poskus was also involved in the development of the Brockton building codes, and is well qualified for this position," Lanza said.

Poskus was a former chairman of the Brockton Planning Board and for eight years served as a member of the Brockton Zoning Board.

Nursing Home week

Nursing home Ombudsman honored

A luncheon to honor the Nursing Home Ombudsman Volunteers, sponsord by the South Shore Elder Services, was given May 10, at the Unitarian Parish House in Cohasset.

Among the guests who attened were Edythe Donkin, president of the Board of Directors of the Agency, and Robert Chambers, State Ombudsman from the Massachusetts Department of Elder Affairs.

The Ombudsman Program is one where trained volunteers visit long-term care facilities on a regular basis. These volunteers offer their friendship to residents, some of whom have no visitors, and also help them to resolve any difficulties they might experience in the course of their daily lives.

Ombudsman volunteers work in close cooperation with nursing home staff in solving any problems that may occur.

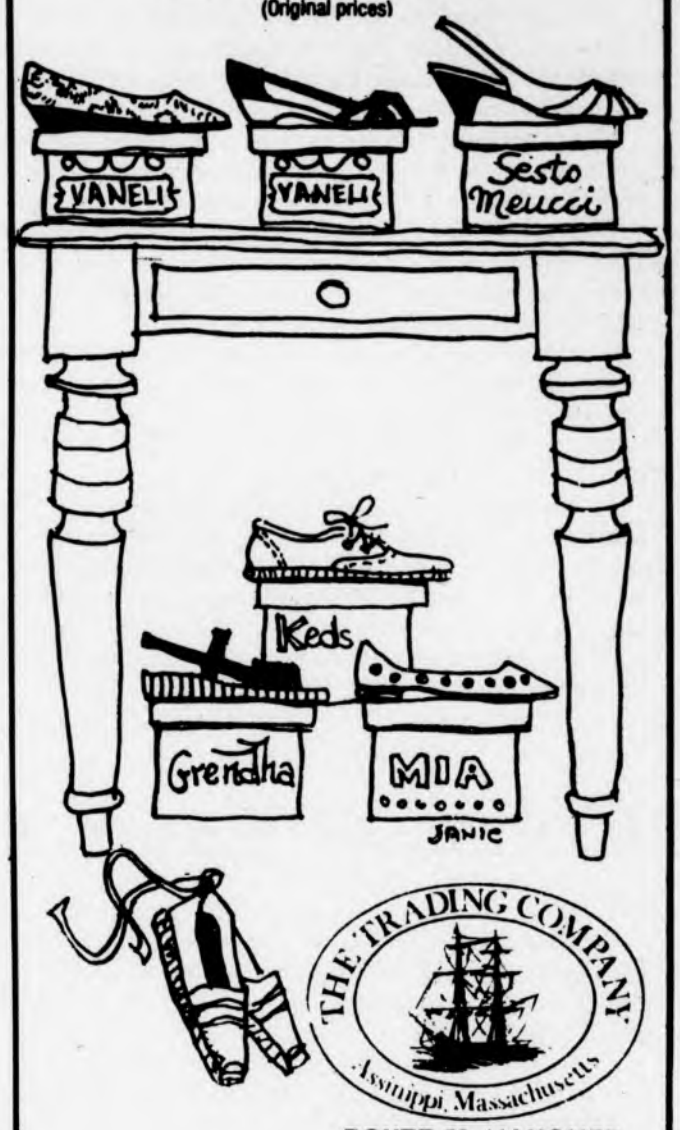
In a little over two years since its inception, the program numbers 28 volunteers, who are regularly visiting 28 nursing homes on the South Shore. Mildred Kirsch, Nursing Home Program Coordinator, said, "They (volunteers) are among the finest on the South Shore; I daresay in the whole state. They have been, and they continue to be an inspiration to me."

Robert Chambers, state Ombudsman who directs 29 such programs in Massachusetts, presented the following volunteers with citations from the Commonwealth, in recognition of two years of service.

They were: Ruth Kravitz and Sylvia Cenzalli, a mother and daughter team, Jospehine Coleman, Diana Drake, Ruth Ford, Ruth Kelly, Mary Lavin, Bernice Lyford, Pemelope Peterson and Frances Stafford.

Citations for one year of service were given to Concetta and Joseph Gaudreau, a husband and wife team, Sally Kiessling, Mary Kilroy, Barbara Krafft, Margaret Lanzendorfer and Mary MacDonald.

Before presenting the citations, Chambers encouraged the volunteers to continue their good work, and also to try to interest their friends and neighbors in joining their ranks.



He said, "There are some facilities which are not yet covered. There are still residents needing the services that you so generously give."

Warren Dahlin, Executive Director of South Shore Elder Service, praised the volunteers for their dedication, adding the importance of Advocacy. He said a recent medical journal published guidelines for allowing confused older patients to die.

One aspect included the lack of a patient advocate. "This," he said, "is a tragic example of the importance and need of specialized and serious work being performed by Ombudspersons."

Dahlin added, the hard work done by volunteers was an inspiration to the staff of South Shore Elder Services, and provides vital energy to all associated with this important program.

Conditions ordered for Cohasset Plaza

The Conservation Commission issued an order of conditions Tuesday night to the proposal submitted last month for Cohasset Plaza on Chief Justice Cushing Highway.

The proposal, submitted by developer Donald Staszko, would require the filling of three wetlands areas in order to construct the shopping plaza.

After lengthy discussions with Conservation Commission consulting engineer John Modzelewski, the board listed several conditions which must be met by the developer.

There are actually three wetland areas within the property, but there is only one significant area on which the shopping plaza will be constructed. The developer intends to fill that area in, and relocate the rentention pond in the rear of the property.

According to the commission's ruling this week, that pond supplies a small amount of ground water into the town's water supply in Lily Pond. A greater concern is whether relocation will increase ground water pollution into the water supply. The commission agreed by a 5-1 vote that relocation of the wetland area will not have a significant pollutant effect on Lily Pond.

Modzelewski expressed some concern about the storm drainage capacity of the relocated rentention pond. He suggested a larger drainage pipe than the proposed six-inch method, and a larger pond than the one proposed by the developer for the rear of the property. The expanded pond and larger drainage pipe would aid the outflow capacity of the ground water retention pond, he added. The board agreed with the recommendation.

The engineer praised the "complete and nicely done" engineering plans presented the commission by the A.J. Flynn Co. One suggestion he made was that a complete planting schedule be made available to the commission regarding the necessary vegetation to be planted along the three wetland areas.

As a deterrent to pollutants that stagnate the ground water, at least a 30 percent vegetation cover of cattails and blueberry plants must surround the areas, Modzelewski suggested.

Another major condition issued by the commission was that an aeration system be devised for the large rentention pond. The consultant will review a system designed at Bentley College, and ascertain whether such a system is feasible for this property. The aeration system is necessary to provide the correct level of oxygen to the ground water pond.

The commission also ordered that sections of suitable granite curbing be constructed along the perimeters of the property.

In an earlier hearing, the commission reviewed a plan to continue repairs of a septic system at 63 Summer Street. Loring Jacobs engineer Renwick Chapman said most of the repairs to the failing system have been made, with no interference to the adjacent salt marsh. The only remaining work is the final grading which will be done without heavy machinery, he said, and installing a 60-foot perimeter drain system. The Board of Health had previously approved the plan.

The Cohasset Board of Sewer Commissioners urge the Citizens of our Town to attend an important Public Hearing at the Town Hall on Thursday, May 24, 1984 at 8 P.M. The purpose of this hearing is to explain the wastewater disposal plan which has been recommended by the Town engineers, Ward Engineering Associates. The Recommended Plan will be summarized, and questions will be answered. The Board of Sewer Commissioners solicit comments and suggestions concerning the Recommended Plan which will be the subject of a warrant article at the Special Town Meeting on Monday, June 18, 1984.

Copies of the Ward Engineering Associates Report are available at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, at the Town Clerk's Office and the Sewer Commission Office at 43 Elm Street. Although the report is lengthy, the Summary and Recommendation (Section One of the Report) can be read in less than half an hour.

Once again, the Board urges your attendance at the Public Hearing at Town Hall on Thursday, May 24, 1984, and at the Special Town Meeting on June 18, 1984. The decision by the Special Town Meeting on the Ward Engineering Associates Recommended Plan will have a major impact on the Town's finances for the next two decades and will determine the Town's growth pattern far into the future.

Sailing is more than a hobby...

come back to the United States, they dared not leave without their beloved vessel. So they sailed home - the long way.

For 13 months, the parents and three children (ages 12, 11, and 9), sailed down the coast of France, to Spain, Morocco, the Canary Islands, and along the Carribbean on a 41-foot boat. Although their thoughts were intially to sail around the globe, diminishing interest in schooling and homework forced the parents to cut the cruise short and set sail for America.

They docked in Scituate, to be near some close friends. They lived aboard the small yacht for a month before renting and then purchasing a home in Cohasset. Although they remain drydocked here, every summer it's off to the ocean.

"When you're sailing, you have time to think. You ask yourself all sort of questions, about why society functions the way it does, and why people do what they do. You become very philosophical," Virginia explains.

Long voyages do have disadvantages, she is not so quick to admit. Sibling quarreling must be nipped quickly because you can't very well walk away from a confrontation.

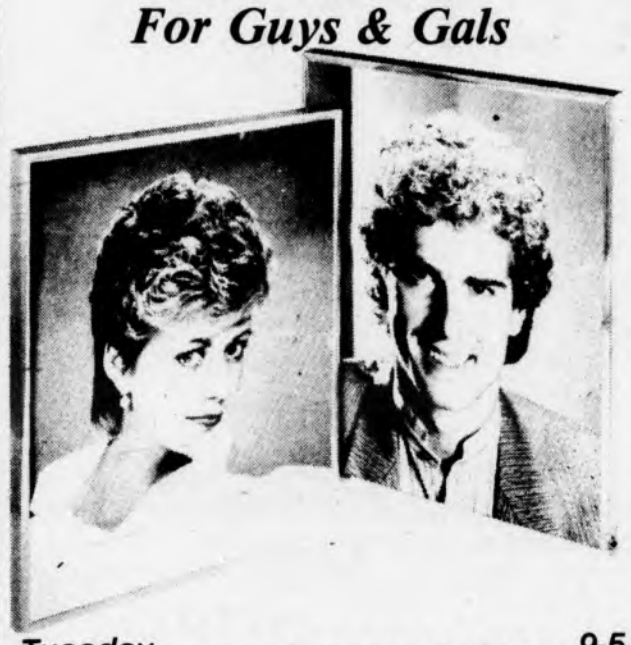
And there are the waves. Yes, she hestitates, some waves are so large, you do have to look well above the boat to see the crest. But, Virginia says, a good boat (and you must have complete faith and trust in your boat) is like a cork and will rise and fall with the wave.

"There are times when the boat will be on its side for days, and then just as quickly, the waves subside and everything is calm," she states. "But in the bad weather, everything gets wet, including your clothes and sleeping bags. And you learn quickly that everything must be secured."

Not to disuade potential sailers, Virginia quickly notes, "the good times far outweigh the bad."

For instance, how many times, have you seen dolphins playing next to you, diving in sequence with the waves? Virginia can tell you what a beautiful spectacle that is. Flying fish springing out from the middle of the ocean is also a common site.

Then there is the majestic full moon over the black night water, and the joyous sunrise which awakens the crew most mornings. These are the things Virginia and her family are witness to each cruise.



"There are the good and the yucky times. But when I sail, I become in tune with so many things - the ocean, the clouds, the night and the day. You never get claustophobic," she adds.

June 2, Spencer will set out for his homeland across this expanse of promised adventures. It will be he, the Summer Salt, and miles to cross. His family awaits him with anxiousness and envy.

The Langford family's "Summer Salt," soon to set sail from England across the Atlantic.

People helping people

Andy Hyslop inspires others to live

By Theresa Sullivan

Andy Hyslop is not your ordinary, run-of-the-mill volunteer.

He doesn't just donate his time.

He doesn't just bring music and dancing to the elderly's lives.

He shares his greatest gift—himself.

Andy Hyslop, 86 is someone senior citizens can talk to and someone who will understand them. Unobtrusively, he inspires strength in those who know him, not only the elderly.

The Massachusetts Federation of Nursing Homes recently honored Andy with its "Volunteer of the Year" award.

Cardigan Nursing Home Activities Director Lucille Sorrentino said Andy has helped her get through some tough times. "He has a tremendous amount of faith. After eight years, I still cry when a resident dies.

"If it wasn't for Andy—he'll remind me about what we're all about. It's not just fun and games; he always keeps me on an even keel."

"He kind of made me realize that even though you have a loss, life goes on. I think that's what his appeal is. He's unpretentious. We love him here."

Andy started visiting local nursing homes after his wife Annie died in 1971. "I wanted to do something. I started visiting nursing homes and the elderly with my cassettes."

His cassettes are tapes of all types of music, especially oldies (particularly the 40's and 50's) and Scottish music. Andy is a native of Ayrshire, Scotland. Annie was from Scotland although they met in the United States.

When he visits a nursing home such as Ocean Manor in Scituate, Cohasset Knoll or Ripley Road Nursing Home in Cohasset, he brings fun when he walks through the door.

"I'm usually in there for two hours. Before I'm finished, I'm dancing." He does the "boogie-woogie" and leads in line dancing. "I do a little dancing, but not break dancing."

One of his regular dance partners is "a lady over 90."

"The residents will come to a function if Andy's coming. If a patient can't come, he'll visit a patient in his room," Sorrentino said.

Whatever Andy does when he visits, people enjoy him. With some of the residents who are less responsive, Andy's music and peppiness get them to tap their feet, she said. "He's just himself. He's a super guy.

"He's my inspiration and I feel he is to the residents. They see him getting up and going."

Andy says he hasn't always been outgoing. But he felt the need to do something for others and he worked to overcome his reticence. Now that he's been visiting nursing homes for awhile, "you get to be as if you seem to be one of the group."

Andy enjoys visiting people as much as they enjoy him. "I just love doing it. I think I get more pleasure to try in my own simple way to make them happy. There's so much misery in the world. Where you do things, it's a love for your fellow man.

"What you give, you get back. You can't buy that. To me, it's so easy to give a few dollars and clear your conscience. (Spending time with people) is always with them."

On the wall in Andy's living room is a sign which is over 80 years-old. It sums up Andy's outlook: "God is love."

Andy's optimism and his faith are his motivation. He doesn't look for negative things. "If you look for trouble, you get it.

"We're told too much about the evil in the world." He finds a lot to be happy for. "I come home from every nursing home with a good feeling. It's there all the time."

He feels he has gone through life with God's hand on his shoulder. His faith is what moves him.

Advisory Board reviews warrant

The Advisory Board approved recommendations for a number of special town meeting articles Tuesday night. Some were new articles, and some were carried over from the annual town meeting which was postponed because of lack of a quorum. The special town meeting will be June 18.

The board voted to recommend:

—the appropriation of $5,000 to establish a play area off Beechwood Street.

—the appropriation of $2,870 for nuisance life control (insects) in Straits Pond.

—the appropriation or transfer of some $6,500 for painting and repairs to the North Cohasset Fire Station.

—the appropriation or transfer of an undetermined amount to partially renovate the first floor of the Bates building.

—the appropriation or transfer of $2,800 to repair and improve the John Smith Memorial.

—requiring commercial structures built after July 1 to install fire alarm boxes.

—the appropriation of $50,000 to purchase a new ambulance.

—the denial of a request for $5,000 for a dog officer's van and $1,800 for the operation and maintenance of that van.

—the amendment of Harbor by-laws to authorize selectmen to set temporary mooring fees.

—denial of a request to transfer $6,000 for permit application costs for the commercial fish pier.

—the appropriation of some $500 for the installation of a diesel fuel storage tank at the Cedar Street landfill.

—paying for the engineering, architectural and construction costs to improve the Mill River Bridge.

—depositing $95,000 in the stabilization fund.

—ammending the agreement with South Shore Vocational Technical School to permit self-funded post secondary programs.

—ammendment of the town bylaws to make appointed terms expire June 30 each year.

—ammendment of the town bylaws to increase the number of members on the Drainage Advisory Committee from three to five.

—ammendment of the zoning bylaws to: increase the number of Zoning Board of Appeals associate members from two to three; regulate earth moving regulations; and define the terms 'lot,' 'lot line rear,' 'yard front' and define setback requirements.

—ammendment of the personnel bylaws to make step increases contingent on an employee's performance.

The advisory board postponed voting on matters relating to the numbering of residences, salaries and other items.

The board will meet with the planning board Thursday, May 17.

Murray's budget item discussed

Norwell selectmen failed to come to the Wompatuck State Park Advisory Council's May 9 meeting as anticipated.

Selectmen were expected to meet with the council to discuss a separate line item placed on the Department of Environmental Management (DEM) budget by State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray for an access road study for the park.

Murray, a Republican, represents Hingham, Hull and Cohasset.

Norwell council representative Myles Cassidy, who chaired the meeting in Robert Garvin's absence, said Norwell selectmen were surprised to learn of the line item and feared the appropriated money was reason enough to believe an access road would be built.

"I thought the selectmen knew it was not a study to build a road," Wes Osborne, of Norwell, a DEM representative, said.

"I expect they fear only a small portion of that money will be spent on the study," Cassidy said. Selectmen feel if they are going to veto a second access road from Route 3 via Norwell (which is one speculated second entrance), then what's the use of even doing a study; they feel it's a foregone conclusion that the $100,000 set aside for an access road study also includes a road being built most likely through Norwell, Cassidy said.

Cassidy said he saw no reason for the selectmen's recent concern over the line item because he and Norwell council representative Arlene Lucid appeared before the selectmen and told them of the study.

"They're paranoid over there," remarked Scituate representative Al Bonney.

As a solution to the misunderstanding, Cassidy suggested inviting selectmen to sit down and talk with the council.

Members agreed that had been tried before with little success.

As planned earlier by the council, Cassidy is sending the Norwell, Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate selectmen a letter from the council explaining the access road study is only a feasibility study. The council plans to call or write DEM for specifics on the access road study.

OTHER BUSINESS

In other business, the council reached a consensus (although not yet put to a final vote) on the spot for a fisherman's landing from a peninsula in the reservoir.

The landing will be small with minimal development and will be for non-motorized (row boat, canoe, etc.) water craft only.

Norwell representative Arlene Lucid submitted her letter of resignation from the council to the Norwell selectmen.

☐ Although Joan Benoit made the headlines with her marathon running after such recent surgery, a Cohasset gal gets headlines in my book! Sarah Linsley entered the Olympic Marathon Trials and finished with the time of 2:43:00. The winning time was 2:31:9:04, that shows that Sarah was right up there! The trials were held in Olympia, Washington . . . too bad they weren't held here, with all of us to cheer her on! Hearty congratulations to Sarah for a job well done.

☐ Another Cohasset runner to watch for is Julie Hoogerveen, who was spotted in the Nantasket race last weekend. She is a dedicated enthusiast, and one who we will be hearing about for some time to come.

☐ If you haven't talked to an excited "new Papa" in a while, then just have a chat with John Kinchla! Last Friday he and his wife, Nancy, became parents of a son, Daniel Patrick, and he wanted to be sure that the Mariner and all Around Town readers got the "exclusive" story . . Daniel has several older brothers to teach him all of the ropes at home, anxiously awaiting their first opportunity to do so. Congratulations to the whole family on their newest member.

☐ Josephine Vangel was recently sworn in as a notary public. Secretary of State Michael J. Connolly and Senator Allan R. McKinnon officiated at the ceremony.

☐ Scott Michael Garvey, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Garvey of Bayberry Lane graduated from the University of Rhode Island with an associate degree in commercial fisheries and marine technology. Scott, a 1981 Cohasset High graduate, has his future plans all thought out . . . this summer he will work on the boat Debra Irene with Peter Hutt, and next fall will return to URI, with a business degree being his next objective.

☐ Joanie Chisholm was honored recently. Joan is a junior at CHS and was elected Vice President of the Southeastern Massachusetts Association of Student Councils. The election was held during the Student Council regional conference held at Dennis-Yarmouth Regional High School on May 2.

☐ Under the "Everybody's Talking About" category, the head of the list last weekend was the outstanding singing trio that were at Hugo's. If you missed this, you still have time to catch the act, as they will be at Hugo's for the month of May.

☐ It seems fitting that Tom Wigmore should be one of the first people to receive cable television. When it was first begun, Tom was one of the ones at the High School who learned how to run the video-tape machine, and he was talking of all of its advantages way back then. Now he'll be able to judge first-hand!

☐ Tonight is the Deer Hill Spring Concert, beginning at 7 p.m., with the Jr. Band, the Deer Hill Band, Deer Hill Chorus and the Concert Choir all performing. Always an entertaining evening, don't miss it. And be sure to note the time, 7:00 p.m.

☐ Under the topic of things not to be missed, The Cohasset Country Fair must be mentioned. It will be held on the Common this Saturday and will have "something for everyone." The fair is a major fundraiser for the benefit of the town's Boy Scout Troops, with proceeds being used to send Troop 28 to Washington, D.C., for a six day instructional tour (this forms the basis for work on the Citizenship in the Nation merit badge). It is a fair for all ages.

☐ Congratulations to Kirsty Munro who was nominated for an NCTE Achievement Award, for her creative and expository writing. Kirsty is a member of the 1985 graduating class.

☐ The mystery house contest ends this week, unless there is a need of a run-off. It has been fun to try to identify the homes that were pictured, congratu lations to those who have done so well.

☐ If you weren't able to catch last week's performances of the Detective Story, don't despair . . . it will be held again this weekend at the town hall. All reports were grand, it was an excellent review, so be sure not to miss it.

☐ It is a busy time of the year for all, graduations, proms, summer plans, etc. Why not take the time out to let us know of the news at your house? Everyone enjoys reading it, and that is what makes this column a succcess!

☐ Our hearty congratulations to Gerald McNabb, a senior at XBHS who has worked this year as an intern for the Mariner. Studying during the day and working hard as a proofreader at night, has not been an easy task for Gerald. He was hired by publisher David Cutler for the summer, and will be helping to produce the seven Mariner newspapers. At such a young age, Gerald is learning the ins and outs of the newspaper biz, and may one day be providing some stiff competition for publisher Cutler. In addition to learning production and printing skills, Gerald is also taking a few stabs at reporting (see this week's AFS auction story). Have a great summer, Gerald.

Notary Public Josephine Vangel is congratulated by Sec. of State Michael Connolly (l) and Sen. Allan McKinnon

Travel Along with EVIE YOUNG

For centuries the Himalayan Mountain kingdom of Tibet was the "forbidden land." It became, in the imaginations of Western explorers, not just the fabled Shangra-La of unspoiled nature, but an Asian El Dorado, or city of gold. Closed to foreigners our of feat that they would threaten its way of life, Tibet became almost a legend. It was one of those faraway places that, like magnets, drew European adventurers on trips that strained and almost surpassed human endurance in quests to breach the last frontiers. After being closed to the outside world for centuries, and all but impossible to reach because of its location high in the Himalayas, Tibet is gradually being opened to foreigners, including small but increasing numbers of Western tourists.

His good advice

Police Chief Joseph Kealey issued a warning to residents last week about the legal and moral dangers of serving alcohol to teens in their homes. We think this advice needs further emphasis.

In an attempt to keep kids off street corners and parking lots where the youngsters illegally consume alcohol, some parents have okayed the drinking of beer within their homes. Perhaps they turn their heads and close their eyes to the fact that despite their children remaining safe within the home, their actions remain illegal.

Civil laws pertaining to underage drinking can not be enforced by police within a private residence. But parents must be wary that once a teen exits from that home and drives away, the legal implications increase.

If that teen should be arrested for drunk driving or be involved in a motor vehicle accident, the onus falls to the individual who provided the booze to the driver.

A parent who allowed drinking within his home, the 'good guy' on the block who volunteered his home for the graduation or birthday celebration, is liable for his actions.

One parent recently told Chief Kealey he would not allow drinking at his son's party - and no one showed. His son was devastated.

What does this reveal about us - that we refuse to celebrate with our friends unless alcohol is available? Chief Kealey is at a loss. He issues warnings that some choose to ignore.

What if you decided to allow your son or daughter and some friends to drink in your home? Think about the circumstance. Are you doing a favor to condone the illegal consumption of alcohol? Is it so imperative to acquiesce to your son's or daughter's wishes ?

What right do any of us have to circumvent a law that was established to protect society from those who choose to abuse it?

To parents and children alike, don't ignore wise advice. Don't allow someone's life to be at the mercy of your ignorance.

Notice to water users

Beginning on or about June 1, the Cohasset Water Department will begin installation of the new water main on Margin Street and Atlantic Avenue.

The result will be improved quality and service to customers. However, there may be periodic disruptions of service or discoloration of water during the 50 day construction work.

A public meeting will be held May 21, at 7:30 p.m. at the Town Hall to explain the project and answer all your questions. The Board of Water Commissioners wish to thank residents and consumers for their anticipated cooperation.

If your water discolors, turn on an outside cold faucet to clear your line. Leave Hot Water faucets off.

The right haircut can sway a vote

By Claire McDonough

"Flora phoned," the Dragon reported. "She wants to know how she should vote for senator and representative."

"That's what I like," I told him, "mindless obedience."

"Well," he amended, "she didn't exactly want to know how you think she should vote. She's mad at Fauna, and she wants to know who Fauna's supporting so she can vote the opposite."

I looked at him. "You're kidding. I've heard of some pretty dumb reasons for choosing a candidate, but that has to be the dumbest."

"Not necessarily," he replied. "I know people who are voting for someone who's never held elective office, never served on a town board, never was involved in a campaign, because he's related to someone who used to run."

"Incredible. That's almost as bad as the people who are voting for the man who bears the greatest physical resemblance to J.F.K."

TheDragon looked pontifical. "I have a theory. It's all the fault of the P.S.A.'s."

"The public service announcements? You're going to have to explain that one."

"Look," he told me, "how many times have you turned on the radio or the television and heard, 'Next Tuesday will be election day. It is your duty as a citizen to vote. Get to the polls early. Support the candidate of your choice — but vote!'

"You never hear an announcer say 'Study the issues. Examine the candidates' records. Find the individual whose goals and philosophies are closest to your own. Decide if he's capable of implementing them. Then vote.'

"When was the last time you heard an announcer say that?"

"Never," I admitted. "Maybe that's why people were for or against Jerry Brown because he dated Linda Rondstadt."

"Now you're getting it," the Dragon said. "When people feel they're obliged to vote or they're not good citizens, but they don't know anything about the issues, they have to have some basis for their choice. I understand the right haircut can carry an election. And the five o'clock shadow can be the kiss of death."

"Still," I mused, "being against someone because Fauna likes him and you're mad at her hardly seems a valid reason. I mean, there isn't any logic in that at all."

"We're not talking logic," the Dragon said patiently. "We're talking politics.

"Any anyway," he continued, "it makes sense in a convoluted sort of way. If you're mad enough at someone, you probably don't respect her judgment. And if you think she has lousy judgment, you figure anyone she's supporting has to be a dud."

"Sure," I agreed. "But what if you make up later?"

He shrugged. "Just hope it happens before the election."

"Well," I sighed, "I find it all very confusing. Do you think I should call Fauna and find out who she's voting for, so I can tell Flora?"

"Suit yourself," he told me. "I have enough trouble trying to decide whether to run for senator or representative."

"You mean deciding who to support, don't you?"

"No," he repeated. "I'm going to run. After all, I have a perfectly good haircut, if I shave twice a day I can avoid five o'clock shadow, my brother once ran for Boston City Council, and my cousin Buddy's 25th anniversary party at the Chateau deVille was in a room next to the room where Ronald Reagan was a guest."

"You certainly have the political connections," I admitted. "Maybe you have a chance, after all."

He nodded slowly. "Four out of five isn't bad," he said. "But I am a little worried because I never dated Linda Ronstadt."

Recount . . .

According to the court complaint, Golden, who lost the recount to McArthur by two votes, also alleges that substantial errors of fact and ruling were made during the recount, pertaining to 16 contested ballots. Fifteen ballots are under contention as being erroneously counted, along with one absentee ballot.

Golden requested a restraining order be issued, to prohibit the defendants from interfering with the contested ballots.

A second request is that following a hearing on the merits of the complaint, the certification of election granted McArthur be revoked and issued to Golden.

If that is not accomplished, Golden has requested the election be nullified and a new election be ordered.

The following is a letter written last week by Golden to the Cohasset voters:

"First and foremost, I would like to thank each and every concerned citizen in the Town of Cohasset who supported and voted for my candidacy in the recent election.

As you are well aware, it has been a long hard campaign which has not yet ended. I have made the decision after much consultation amongst my many friends and supporters to pursue the electionrecount through the appeal process. It has been a difficult time for me these past ten days to find myself now in a position where I have two fewer votes than I had election night. Upon the ballots being reviewed, there appears to be discrepancies on fifteen ballots that have since been impounded.

In fairness to the entire election process and the voters of the Town of Cohasset, these ballots must be reviewed by people who have had far more experience than the dedicated officials who worked under the stressful situation for the first time in the town's history when there was a dead tie for the office of Selectman.

In conclusion, I want you, the concerned citizens of the Town of Cohasset, to know the reason I am pursuing this appeal - to insure all candidates and voters alike that the election process is a value to be held high.

Thank you for your continued support," Doris Golden.

A discussion of sewer facility plan

(This letter was sent to the Board of Selectmen. Ed)

Dear Selectmen,

Since appearing before your Board last week, I have received numerous phone calls in regard to the sewer issue. Most of these calls have centered on the fact that citizens consider the Special Town Meeting scheduled for June 18 an opportunity to express their individual choice for a long range solution to the wastewater problem. It appears this may be the first time in the long history of this issue in which the Town can truly determine a potential solution.

If it is so that the original Facilities Plan approved in 1979 becomes effective if the alternative Ward Plan does not win Town Meeting approval, then it seems the original plan must be discussed on the floor of Town Meeting. An article in the Warrent relating to the original plan would give those citizens who do not wish to vote for the Ward proposal(s) the same advantages as those who do wish to support those proposals. In other words, an article would allow citizens the right to:

1. make statements about the original Facilities Plan without fear of being ruled out-of-order;
2. amend the article if they so chose to lessen the scope of the original plan;
3. stand on the floor of Town Meeting as proponents or opponents but on an equal basis in the process of deciding what is the best solution to this issue.

I do not understand how such an article could be considered either diversionary or confusing. The orignal Facilities Plan is already an issue in this problem.

Further, to consider that the Townspeople would be confused by such an article does an injustice to both citizens and Town officials. I have watched our Townspeople grapple with many important issues. I feel quite assured they are capable of solving this one!

I believe what should be of primary concern to the Board of Selectmen is the solution to a problem with a very long history and far reaching consequences, I know often it requires a great deal of courage and fortitude for our Townfathers to give direction in issues such as this. However, I feel the citizens of Cohasset deserve to be heard on both sides of this issue while on an equal footing with one another.

Sincerely,
Janet M. Daggett

Report from the State House

By Mary Jeanette Murray

MASSACHUSETTS PUBLIC SCHOOL SYSTEM H5704

The final draft of a comprehensive education reform bill that seeks to modernize and improve the Massachusetts public school system will be debated by the Legislature later this month.

The bill, H5704, attempts to ensure that all Massachusetts public school graduates are able to read, write, compute, and understand computers and other technologies.

In order to achieve this goal, H5704 recommends:

* The Board of Education shall review and "approve" or "not approve" each school district's School Plan and its implementation every five years. A district failing to meet its School Plan's objectives and goals shall have one year to realize the goals. A district still failing to meet its goals shall have its Chapter 70 (state funding for education) controlled by the Board of Education.

* graduation requirements to be set by local school committees assuring that state standards are met;

* requires school districts to provide two years of kindergarten -- one optional for four-year-olds and one mandatory for five-year olds;

* requires school districts to prepare and submit to the state Board of Education comprehensive plans for curriculum standards and objectives;

* establishes grants to fund school projects on dropout prevention, work-study options, and other alternative programs for students having difficulty in the traditional classroom situation.;

* requires annual basic skills testing at grades five and seven, and at a lower grade to be determined by the local system. Those falling below accepted standards will be targeted for remediation before allowed to progress to the next grade level;

* sets maximum class sizes of 20-28 in grades K-6;

* requires evaluation for administrators and teachers;

* provides incentives for college students to become teachers, by state subsidy of 20 percent of the interest and principal on education loans for each year of teaching in a Massachusetts public school;

* provides emphasis on computer literacy;

* increases requirements for teacher certification.;

* authorizes the Board of Education to offer one-time bonuses to certified teachers in areas of critical shortages, such as math and science;

* establishes minimum teacher salary of $18,000. Teachers with more service must have their salaries increased. This is only fair and equitable.

* allows teachers to retire at age 55. Beginning July 1, 1985, retirement age will be gradually lowered from 65 until it reaches 55 in about five years, and will place these retirees at top grade level.

The projected funding requirements for this proposal are: 1985, $39.4M (over '84); 1986, $152.6M (113.2M over '85); and 1987, $159.7M (7.1M over '86).

There is still concern over where the appropriate funding will come from. As I develop more information on this proposal, I will report back to you.

Mystery House week no. 10

It's almost playoff time and there are still two contestants fighting for first place with seven correct answers.

Last week was the first time in a while only one person knew the correct answer. Congratulations to A.J. Antoine Jr. of 17 Elm Ct. who guessed 411 South Main Street.

Other guesses were 130 North Main St., 16 Oak St., 298 and 312 King St.

Our picture of 45 Spring Street was incorrect last week because of a photography error and the correct picture is published this week.

Last week's house is known as the Francis Lincoln House, built in 1806 by Francis Lincoln. Francis was the great-great grandson of Mordecai Lincoln whose old mill still exists over the Scituate line off South Main Street.

The exact location is South Main Street, going toward North Scituate. The house is the second of two prominent Cape Cod cottages on the right beyond "Dead Man's Curve" and a few yards this side of the Scituate town line. The two Capes are side-by-side and near the road. A sign on this house says "Lincoln House" and a small sign says "HT 88."

Francis Lincoln was born in 1775 and was married in 1804 to Peggy Nichols. He was a farmer and tanner. The South Main Street house he built is just north of the one built by Mordecai for his son, Isaac. That house no longer exists. Francis Lincoln died in 1850.

Still in contention for first place after nine weeks of play with one to go are Robert Leonard Sr. and Warren Pratt. Leonard and Pratt each have seven correct answers.

The Galt Grant family is now tied with A. J. Antoine Jr. who climbed to a tie for second place with six correct answers.

With five correct answers are Lillian Pierce, Betty Enders, and Verna Martini.

Jean Rosano, Lynette Lyndan, Charles Wheelright and Hamilton Tewksbury each have four correct answers.

These people are vying for the retail prizes which will be a $100 gift certificate at the Linen Chest, $50 gift certificate at Hugo's and a $25 gift certificate at Fleming's of Cohasset.

This will be Week 10 of the ten-week Mystery House Tour. If need be, two houses will be provided for playoffs.

Once you find the home, write down the address of the homes, exact number and street along with your name, address and phone number and send it to the "Mystery House Tour", care of the Mariner, Box 71, Cohasset, 02025 or drop of the answers in an envelope at Cohasset Colonial Pharmacy or at Hennessey's News, both in Cohasset Village.

The deadline for weekly entries will be 9:30 a.m. sharp Tuesday.

The following week we will disclose the correct address with a picture of how the home looks today with a little history brief about each house.

Remember, only one guess per week.

This week's clue is: this house was a seafarer's house.

BOY'S BASEBALL

Last Monday Cohasset lost to Whitman-Hanson, 8 to 5. Chris Kuhn picked up three hits, while Philip Mahoney had two. David Ormiston had one hit which brought in two runs, and Bob Corkery also had a hit. Bob pitched an excellent game, but Cohasset committed three errors, which cost them the game.

Against Scituate last Wednesday, Cohasset lost, 6 to 3. Chris Kuhn had the team's only two hits. Chris also pitched a good game.

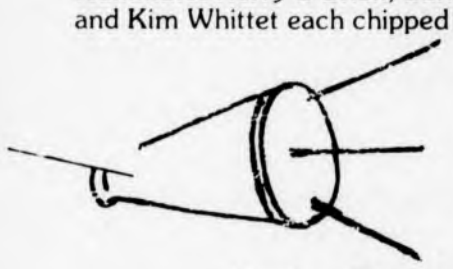
Rockland beat Cohasset Thursday, 4 to 1. The team had five hits in all. Sean Corkery pitched his best game of the year, and Philip Mahoney hit a nice double.

BOY'S TENNIS

The boys won a match and lost one last week. The team has improved overall, and look forward to a more successful season next year.

Against Scituate, Cohasset lost 3 to 2. Rich Redick and Brian Ramsey both won. On Thursday the team shut out Rockland again, 5 to 0. This was Cohasset's second shut out.

JV BASEBALL



Cohasset's JV Skippers played another week of very solid baseball.

Against three large division schools, which featured mostly sophomores and juniors, our very young team won one and lost two.

Cohasset lost 6 to 1 to Whitman Hanson, in a game that was 2-0 going into the 7th inning.

Thursday saw a very tough loss to Rockland, one of the top teams in the league. The game was 2 to 2 after 7 innings, but Rockland scored 3 runs in the 8th to win it. Mike Gentile drove in both Cohasset runs.

In the win over Scituate, Glen Bernstein's two out, bases loaded single, broke a two all tie, as Cohasset went on to a 5-2 victory. Pete Sandblom pitched three shutout innings for the win.

Going . . . going . . . gone!

By Gerald McNabb

Bids were flying high and low as the annual AFS auction got under way last Saturday at St. Stephen's Hall.

Linton Young and Jerry Schultz volunteered their services as auctioneers. The fun began promptly at 8 p.m. after a brief visit from local IRS representative "Bud Thudpucker." Participants arrived at 7 p.m. to view the articles for auction, which varied from a chimney cleaning to four Celtics tickets for the final game against the Knicks.

Some items of note wre the five Cabbage Patch Dolls auctioned throughout the evening. The last one brought a winning bid of $105. The Kornet family, brought home two dolls, including one of the new "Premie" dolls.

The highest bid was $250 for an eight-course Italian Dinner for eight, courtesy of Jo-Ann and Denis Rossi, paid by the Hoffman family.

Some collectables offered were two miniature chairs handcrafted and painted by Carlo and Barbara Conte, which went for $45 and $50. An original work by local artist Eleanor "Claffy" Williams entitled, "My Appletrees," was sold for $45.

One contributor of note was AFS advisor and High School language teacher George Fortin, who donated his services as a pilot. He offered three hours in his Cessna 172 plane. In addition he offered a free round-trip flight to Provincetown. The hours went for $70, $70 and $57. The Provincetown trip sold for $75.

There was a break in the auction, while the silent auction winners were posted. Some interesting items were four copies of "Boston's Most Eligible Bachelors," which included one local summer resident Dick Karoff, and a hand made patchwork pillow donated by Susan Dickson. These items and others were for written bids until 8:30 p.m.

The proceeds of the auction provide scholarships for eligible students traveling abroad under the AFS program. Some students going this summer are Vicki Spooner, who will travel to Brazil for the summer. John Froio is going to Portugual, and junior Jim Martin is still waiting to hear on his destination. Cohasset is hosting New Zealander Tui McArthur who is residing at the Hoffman's on Pond Street.

As one patron, Nancy Sandell said, "I am pleased at the generosity of the people who came out to support AFS." The auction attracted over 100 supporters with more than sixty people taking bid numbers.

In all, the evening collected over $4,500 for the AFS organization.

As one Cohasset youth summed up the evening, "It made you feel closer to the town, and all the people."

This is a reflection of the success of AFS...bringing the world a little closer home.

Teens exploring careers

The Cohasset Social Service League is sponsoring for the second year a summer intern experience for current tenth and eleventh graders. TEC places students for a two week period in "jobs" in the fields of their choice and interest, followed by evaluation of the experience by both the student intern and his or her "employer."

Placement requires careful selection of students, matching a student to a trade or profession where the youth will receive the widest and most useful exposure to a chosen field; will have assigned tasks, and will have regular communication between the placement sponsor and the intern.

Although the students will not be paid, during the two week period it is expected they will profit substantially from this opportunity.

Last summer 14 students participated in TEC. Those employers who offered intern positions were the following: Boston City Hospital, Michael Bliss, M.D.-physician; Braintree Mini School, Ann Fletcher-special needs children; Brockton Hospital, Philip Arena, M.D.-radiologist; Charles River Designs, James Sandell-architecture; The Cohasset Mariner, Mike Berger-newspaper production; designers Creation, Philip Smith-interior design; Driftway Radiology, Ronald Messer, M.D.-x-ray technician; Hull Teen Clinic, Linda Wackerman-social work; E.F. Hutton, Bruce Cameron-investments; Kearns Animal Clinic, Dr. Kearns-veterinarian; David Maltz, M.D.-pediatrician; and Norfolk Partners Ltd., Boston, Don Woolf-advertising. The response to the program was extremely enthusiastic among both the employers and the interns.

Last week the Guidance Department at the high school and the League conducted an assembly to inform the students about TEC. Forms will also be available at the League Office at St. Stephens Church Hall (383-0771) from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. daily.

It costs less per square foot to build a two-story home than one that is all on a single level. That's why so many traditional homes are two stories. A smaller roof covers twice the interior space . . . a smaller basement suffices . . . and more home goes on less land. Owning a two-level condominium also offers advantages . . . excellent wall space for hanging paintings and decorative objects . . . lower heating and air conditioning costs . . . and excellent privacy between levels.
We have some very choice two-level attached single family condominium homes available at The Meadows, the very popular and successful Green Company community in Hingham. Most of the two- and three-bedroom units offer large private decks, walk-out basements with walls of glass which can be easily converted. There's a swimming pool, whirlpool, clubhouse and tennis courts.
The sales office and furnished models are open every day from 9 to 5. Two-level homes start at about $170,000. There are also a few single-level homes ranging from about $190,000 to $240,000 if you prefer. Take exit 14 from Route 3 and follow Route 228 toward Hingham four miles, turn right on Free St., one mile to our entrance. Call 740-1500.

is Bobbie Ciarfella, who also is overseeing the worker of the various contractors on the site. Given the freedom (and money) to redecorate the estate, Ciarfella has travelled to the northern New England states to hunt down antique furniture to fit the image Yankee wants to acheive. In addition, 1,000 modular pieces of brass and mahogany office furniture are being shipped in at a cost of $300,000.

"We would like the building to look stunning, and were not quite there," Ciarfella said during a tour of the estate before the arrival of the new furniture.

The goal, she said, is to create "a showplace for the town, as well as a happy, safe working environment."

Starting our tour in the basement, Ciarfella noted that over seven miles of telephone wire had been laid out throughout the estate to hook up Yankee's communication network.

The basement ("ground level" in business lingo) was once used primarily as a storage are--one room was set aside solely for vases. Today, ground level consists of a computer room, fitness and locker rooms, "attitude adjustment" room (bar), mailroom and boiler room.

The second floor holds Montel's office, the receptionist, a conference room (formerly the breakfast room), employee kitchen and living rooms, and other office space.

The third floor is home for the accountants and tax personnel, where as many as 21 servants were once quartered. The fourth floor, the attic, may be used in the future, but there are no definite plans as of yet.

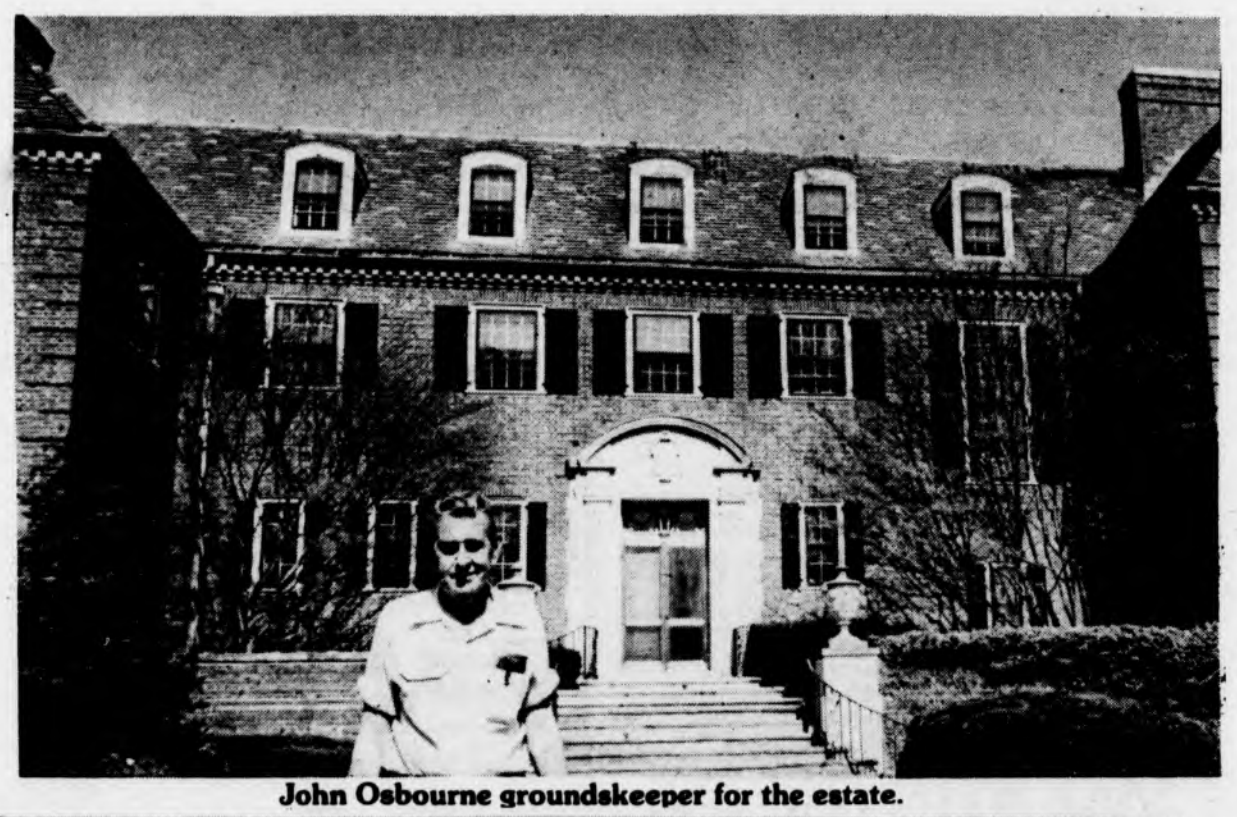
Second floor office overlooks Cohasset Harbor.

Adorning all levels are numerous new light fixtures for a brighter working environment, and the once dreary gray walls have been coated with a light pastel for the same purpose. "We added a lot of light and a lot of life to the place," Ciarfella remarked.

Outside, the tennis courts are ready for action, and a new poolhouse is getting the final touches. The pool, once filled by the ocean, is now freshwater.

All the work, inside and outside, is expected to be completed by May 31, when Yankee's board of directors will meet at the site.

Wanting a final verdict on the merits of the conversion, we went to the one person closest to both the "before and after" looks of the estate.



That person is John Osbourne ("Ozzie") of Duxbury, who was Jessie Cox' chauffeur and all-around handy man for the 15 years prior to her death. Now employed in a handy-man capacity for Yankee Oil and Gas, Ozzie said "the neighbors weren't too keen on it at first, but now they're starting to come around."

And his own personal opinion? "Yankee Oil and Gas is probably the best thing that ever happened to the place."

Also on tap is the special museum tour held by the Historical Society and the Cohasset Recreation Department. Thursday, May 24, at 11 a.m., the two organizations will co-sponsor a group tour of the Capt. John Wilson House and the Maritime Museum at Elm Street, Cohasset Center.

The Capt. Wilson House, dating from 1810, features collections of antique home furnishings, children's toys, paintings, prints and other memorabilia of early Cohasset.

The Maritime Museum, an early ship's chandlery dating from before 1800 and originally owned by the Bates family, houses the Society collection of maritime artifacts including 19th century fishing gear, relics of some of Cohasset's worst shipwrecks, and contains an exhibit showing the story of the two Lighthouses at Minot's Ledge. Ship models, paintings and prints illustrate New England's great "Age of Sail" during the 18th and 19th centuries.

This special pre-season tour will meet at the Society's Maritime Museum, Elm Street. To register please call the Cohasset Recreation Department's office at the Town Hall at 383-6791. All are welcome.

Angler's corner

By George Doucette

Many of us have forgotten that mid-May means Linesiders (Striped Bass) are in the rivers.

Many estuaries on the south Cape and Cape Cod Bay up to the North River hold spring runs of seven to 10 lb. Stripers and they are hungry.

Here are a few techniques to get you going. Drifting seaworms on a float/rig is a proven winner for Bass. Another good bet, if you are night fishing, is a slowly retrivered 5½" Rebel swimming plug—as slow as you can possibly work it and still have swimming action.

Fish outgoing tides on or around the full moon and if you listen carefully you can hear and see those Schoolies slapping and chasing bait in the shallows near those sand bars.

Good bets are Damon's Point in the North River, inside Duxbury Beach on the Powder Point Bridge, and up in Kingston near the mouth of the Jones River. Remember, Bass like the mouths of rivers and a outgoing tide.

If you are fly fishing, then Bass are for you. This is the time when they feed heavily on sand eels. A good sand eel pattern worked slowly over a bar could produce an explosion that will tear your arm from the socket.

Stripers are known for their powerful long runs and headshaking leaps and anyone who has taken them on a fly rod can tell you what a great experience it can be.

This is the time to dust off those rods and reels, and wet aline for one of the gamest fish around—the School Bass. But remember, nothing under 24" is legal, so save those little ones for next year.

Get out, go fishing!

The aftermath . . . when the living isn't easy

By Lois Martin

Last week a friend died. And his death exploded in the lives of his family and friends like a thousand pieces of breaking glass. Each new reality, unthought of before Tuesday, brought piercing pain to those who had been happily affected by his life and who suddenly found themselves unhappily and totally affected by his death.

Jim was big at the bank but no man's bigger than in his own home with his family and his friends. A loved husband, father, friend has the highest status among beings.

And in the quivering aftermath of his funeral service and his family's delicate new beginnings, there is among those of us who participated in the process an unwelcome fresh maturity that the loss of a peer can bring.

PATCHES

It's one of those skills in life that we'll never get good at, losing someone with grace. But in the hour-like minutes that have mattered so much in the days after his death, gentle affirmations of caring have been as clearly valuable as was Jim.

I watched young people by the scores come into the house to see their friends who had lost a father. And I heard them speak to the family of their sympathy and their sadness with poignant articulation.

Grief has never been better nor more kindly phrased than it was on their lips. They made themselves look like we truly have something good to count on when it's their turn to take over.

There were friends who came from other states. They'd been neighbors who'd raised their children side by side. Amazing, isn't it, how death brings lives together with a strength that finds new height and meaning.

Oh, we went through the human ritual, then, of necessary laughing and talking, hearing and telling old times, buoying up the courage like a strong chain, a bond, that went around the room.

The thing is death strips veils. There's no phoniness in a room that's filled with people getting through a tragic time together. There's no subtlety or pretense.

Instead there are the hugs, the handshakes, the terms of promise on days to come. People from Maryland and Connecticut plan to come back, they said, whenever they're needed.

There they were from so many fields of endeavor, so many choices, tastes, backgrounds, ways of cooking chicken and of arranging furniture.

Yet put together in the room amidst the grandparents, the nieces and nephews, with the family, there was a common thread among the people called "friends of the family." We all could have been neighbors and liked it. Those who hadn't met one another before couldn't wait to meet, to share the common friendship.

I am little acquainted with the means by which other cultures handle dying. I have been to a couple of funeral services in a place where grief was expressed differently from what has been the way for us. We've been big on containment wherever possible. Yet I don't know when we've ever found fault with anyone who expressed grief, though our society has given points if you hold it in.

From experience I'd say that's not smart. Somehow one's loss, whether it is merely in compassion with the loser or is the direct result, must be exercised . . . exorcised. In the two somewhat different funerals I mentioned, built-in the service was what amounted to a time for the family and friends to break down and cry. We'll be smart if we schedule it in it if doesn't happen naturally.

There are times to cry. And losing a friend, a peer is one of them. Our crying is not entirely for the dead, it is for the living. Because most of us, having reached that rich middle age of ripened awareness, know what it means to be alone. We dread it for those we love. And we know that, help as we will and, boy, will we, there are hours that hurt so much in new beginnings that no one ever asked for.

I appreciate a perspective that reaches beyond today's grief to tomorrow's hope. A good person who has lived has made of his life and of his death, albeit too soon, a cause for a celebration.

What would this place have been without the likes of the fine men and women with whom we've shared space and time and noble intent?

Thank God they've lived. What wonderful things this one man accomplished in 49 years. He was delightedly married to a woman with whom he raised four children. He gained noble regard in the marketplace of his choosing. He attracted people who appreciated him and who valued life.

He didn't stay to grow old. He didn't get to retire and to do more things. Apparently he'd done them. And much of the good he'd done was echoing on his behalf, in his honor, at his home this last week.

So much good has come of his having lived.

And those who are left to continue are determined to do it well, knowing they won't even have heart for it for a while.

Somehow, whatever faults our funeral process may have, there is inherent in it proof of life. We've proved it exists in the indestructibility of love of all ages. And there is the thread that gets us through.

☐The director of a burlesque show couldn't fire any of his chorus girls because he didn't have anything on any of them.

☐Somewhere I read this item: "Mrs. Jones presented the Boy Scout troop with a stuffed barn owl in memory of her late husband."

Hingham theatre's Annie is a 'full-blown smash'

By Judy Gilman

The Hingham Civic Music Theatre has a full-blown smash it on its hands with its presentation of Annie, and would-be theatre-goers should get their tickets as soon as possible for this weekend's closing performances Friday and Saturday night.

This is a lighthearted Annie--where the villains are never really menacing and the happy ending is, without a question, just around the corner. Even the Hooverville-ites look happy. And Sandy--well, Sandy is just delighted to be around in the midst of this giant-sized production.

From the opening bars of the overture with the accompanying cartoon slides projected on the curtains and scrim, the mood was set for an evening to sit back and enjoy a great many performers singing, dancing and having a wonderful time.

Norwell's Denielle Edlund, in the title role, was, by turns, funny and brash and sensitive. Her scenes with Daddy Warbucks (Bruce Cameron) really worked--you just knew these two had found each other.

What can one say about a blonde bombshell of a five-year-old who, as Molly the orphan, nearly stole the show every time she was onstage? Caroline deLima of Cohasset was nothing short of magnificent. That is in no way to discount the excellent performances of the accompanying orphans (Cara Harries, Joanie Pimentel, Melissa Fielding and Lauren Rodriquez). Their big number, "It's a Hard-knock Life," was well-sung crisply enunciated and brilliantly danced and brought down the house.

The residents of the 59th Street Bridge Hooverville were just as crisp and precise with their ode to Herbert Hoover, "We'd Like to Thank You." Hanover's Donald Capen did a tremendous job with the entire cast in getting that clockwork precision necessary for a big production number to be successful.

Miss Hannigan (Sharon Petti) and her "Little Girls," in which she details the woes of running an institution full of the same, was another show-stopper. She sure was sure-footed on top of that desk.

And her accomplices in the scam to bilk Oliver Warbucks of his $50,000, Lily St. Regis (Gloria Blanco) and Rooster (Rick Sosny) were equally light-hearted menaces. It's a pity the show doesn't include a second reprise of their "Easy Street."

Lucille Ann Walsh as Grace, the hardworking secretary to billionaire Warbucks was charming--and what a voice! Her scenes opposite Petti as the tippling Hannigan were particularly well done.

This is a show with tremendous depth of performing skill that makes every bit part and walk-on as well-polished as the major roles. Take the Boylan Sisters, for example (Ronnie, Bonnie, and Connie). With their platinum blonde hair and their over-elaborate blue satin dresses, they were a sight in themsleves during the scene at the NBC radio studio--not to mention the bits of business they added (sticking their wads of gum on the microphone before bursting into song was especially appropriate). Vicki Bliss, Susie Lawler and Sarah deLima (yes, another deLima who was, incidentally Pitti-Sing in the recent production of The Mikado) were just one of the show's finishing touches.

As noted earlier, this is a lighthearted production, and no one takes themselves seriously. Nowhere was that more evident than in the characterization of FDR, played by Thomas Dowling. The grin, the uptilted cigarette, the exaggerated drawl were all done with a delicate, humorous touch that didn't detract from the fact that this is hardly a serious story line but one drawn from the funnies.

Though the audience sees only what's on stage, the work to put on that spectacle takes the labor of many unseen hands. First congratulations go to Donna Milani Luther, who, as director, set the tone and pace and kept the production going. Capen, as mentioned earlier, did a superb job of staging. Salvatore Bartolotti handled the extremely capable orchestra with a light touch and kept the momentum going at full tilt. It would be a pleasure just to hear that collection of musicians play show tunes, with or without a theatrical production going on above them.

The sets were both effective and workable, and the use of the semi-sheer scrim aided speedy set changes which kept up the show's pace. The backdrop, particularly of the Manhattan skyline, was very effective in setting the scene for the show.

The costumes (including, of course, Annie's "must" dress of red and white) were effective without being over-elaborate.

All in all, Annie is not to be missed. The little orphan favorite will be on the stage of Hingham High School this Friday and Saturday night at 8 p.m. Tickets are available at the Hingham Square Book Shop, the Hingham Public Library and at the door. She and the rest of the cast will be singing their hearts out, displaying some good tunes (including the almost too well-known "Tomorrow," which Edlund does with style), dancing with verve and style and putting on a wonderful show.

Detective Story delights with serious drama

By Corinne A. Kutish

Community theatres characteristically draw smaller audiences when they put on dramatic performances. One can only suppose that folks are leery of strong emotions other than laughter.

But it would be a pity if South Shore theatre lovers let this prevent them from enjoying "Detective Story," now in performance by the Cohasset Dramatic Club at the Town Hall.

Directed by long-time Cohasset Drama Club member Wayne Miessner, "Detective Story" by Sidney Kingsley follows the goings-on in the detective squad room of the 21st Precinct Police Station of New York City. The time is August, 1949, just after the end of World War II.

Just imagine the popular television show, "Barney Miller," set in the Forties and you've got "Detective Story"—shoplifters are picked up, burglars are run in, big-time criminals are interrogated. It's a slice of life, all enacted within the plain institutional green walls of this rather run-down police station.

Minor plots weave in and out, while the play's main theme follows one man's struggle with the gray areas of living, loving and forgiving in what he had previously perceived as the black and white world of good vs. evil.

Detective Jim McLeod, played with jerk mannerisms and great intensity by Wayne Barcomb, is a hard-bitten cop, intent on catching quack abortionist, Kurt Schneider, played with low-key malevolence by George Ela. Schneider has been the cause of two deaths, although the police have been unable to convict for lack of evidence.

McLeod is shocked when he learns that his own young wife, Mary, played with touching tenderness by Jan Higbee, was one of Schneider's clients before she married McLeod. In several emotion-charged scenes we watch as a man, unused to compromise, churns with the alternate feelings of disgust and compassion.

The conclusion of the play is intense, moving and startling. To give away more of the ending would detract from your enjoyment.

"Detective Story" is much more than raw plot, however. The individual characterizations that trod across the stage and then disappear are engaging, and even funny.

A real delight is Gari Glennon as an inept shoplifter, caught stealing an imitation alligator handbag.

"I don't even know why I did it," she wines in her Brooklynese, twisting her blonde hair. "I've got lots nicer handbags at home."

Carl Slotnick plays a real rascal of a criminal, who not only robs homes regularly, but then cheats his slow-witted accomplice, played by David Sweeney.

George Hamacher is McLeod's gentle partner, Detective Lou Brody. He chats fatherly with each suspected criminal. He wants to know the story behind the crime and even pleads with his partner to give one confessed thief a second chance.

"He reminds me of my son," he says, remembering his son's death during the war. "We don't understand these kids' problems."

Chris Lovetere plays Arthur, the young man so reminiscent of Brody's son. Caught for stealing $480 from his employer, Arthur struggles with the futileness of his motive—he wanted to impress his estranged girl friend, Joy.

Sally Langer is Joy's sister, Susan, who has always secretly loved Arthur. Langer is sweet and believable in her stubborn portrayal of a woman determined to help the man she loves.

The philosopher of the stage is Harry Heineman as the seedy reporter Joe Feinson, who comments regularly on the injustice of justice.

The calm commander of the squad is Lt. Monaghan, played with earnest caring by Bob Julian.

Other cast members with their own memorable characterizations are Carroll Richards, Dudley Marsh, Scott Ketcham, Judith Chute, John Kuhn, Wendell Leary, Jack McCarthy, Florence Kelley, Janice Daley, Carter Hill, Bonnie Haley, Richard Donovan, Don Freiter, Peter Tolman, David Wadsworth, Edward Lappen, Richard Donovan, and Michael Cox.

The production staff for this fine drama includes Production Manager Betty Miessner, Stage Manager Don Freiter, and Set Designer Alice Wehter King.

Opening night's performance showed a little lack of polish in that lines were often fumbled and the pacing was uneven, but by this weekend the show would be in fine form.

Performances are Friday and Saturday, May 18 and 19 at 8 p.m. at Cohasset Town Hall. Tickets are $4 and are available at the door.

Be prepared for an engrossing evening of drama.

The arts come alive on local cable television

By Theresa Sullivan

Documentaries, art and cultural listings, sports events, panel discussions and town board meetings.

These are a sampling of the program possibilities for Cohasset Community Television on cable TV.

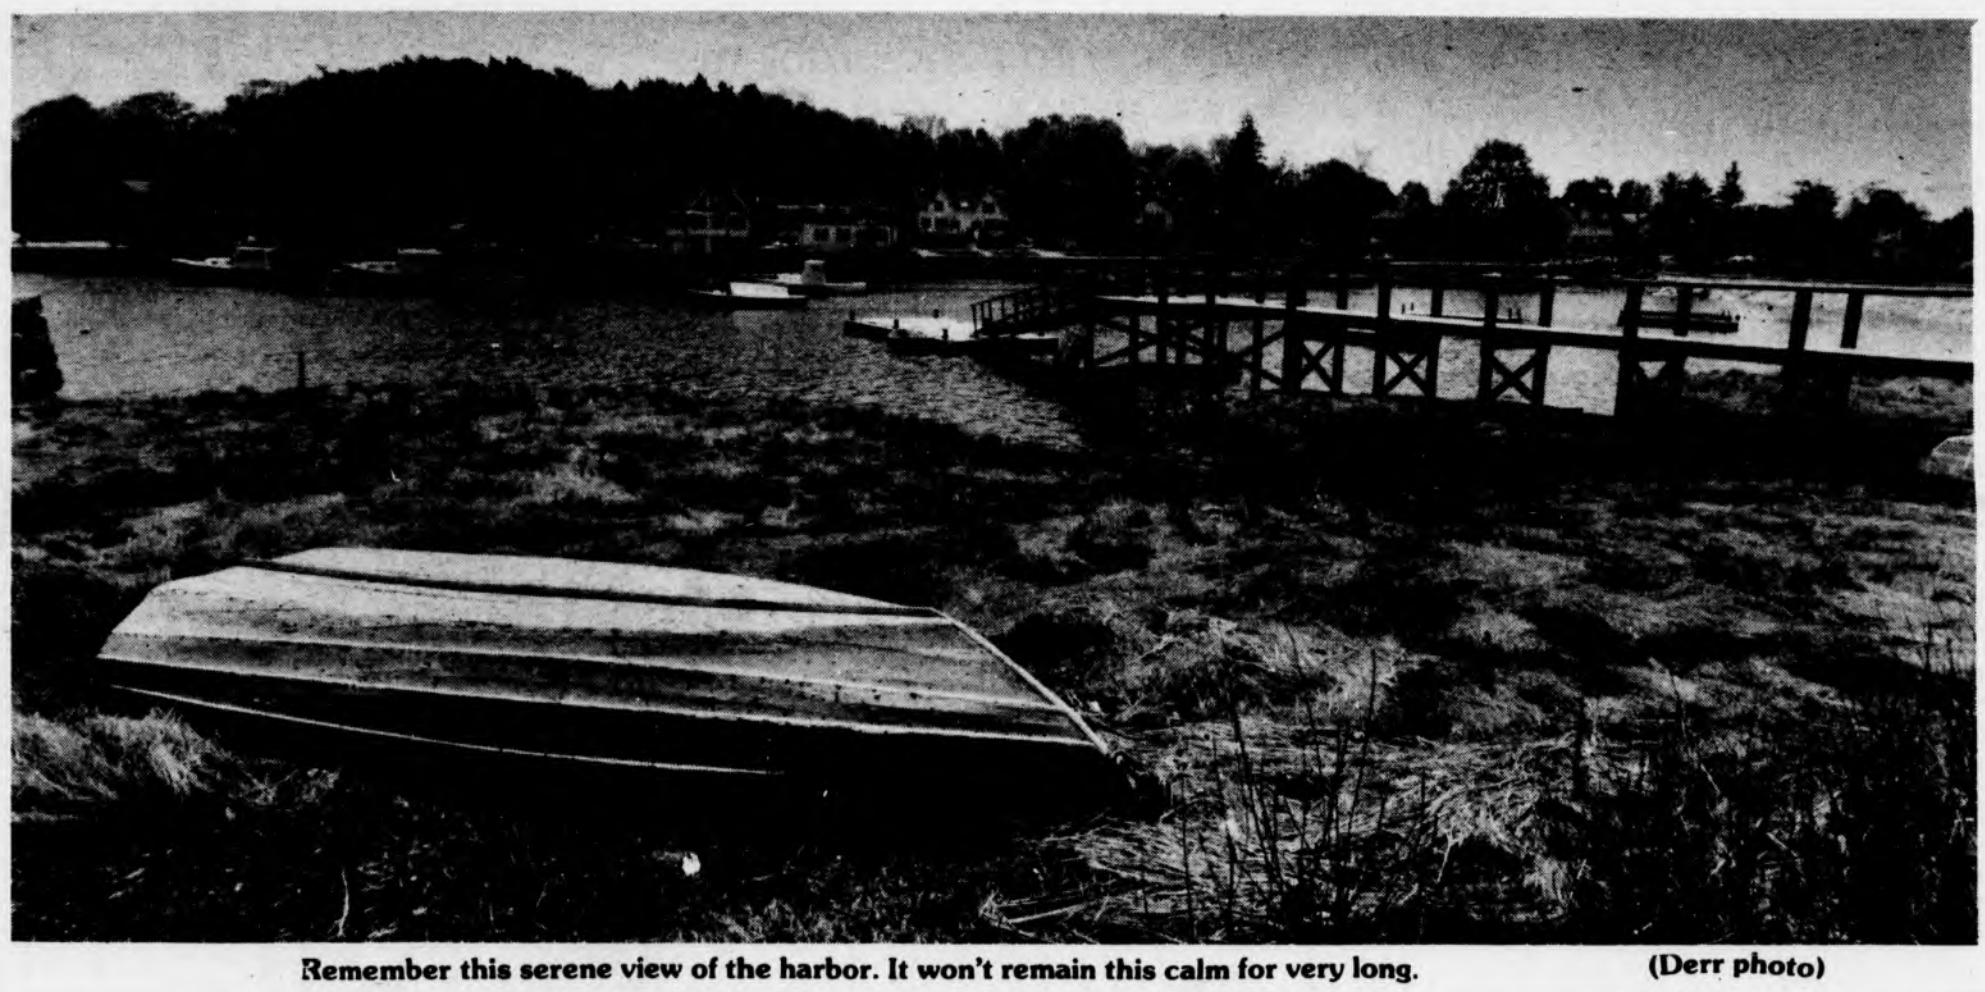
By the end of the summer, all residents who want cable TV will be hooked up, American Cablesystems Program Coordinator John Ronan said. And the local channel is designed to be operated by residents.

The local channel, 3, exists for residents and has as many possiblities as there are people to generate ideas, Ronan told representatives from town organizations Tuesday night.

The community cable TV office is on Stagecoach Road. Ronan has been conducting workshops and will begin a new one Thursday nights in June. The workshop will be from 7 to 10 p.m. at the center. He is tentatively planning another set of June workshops Monday and Wednesday evenings from 7 to 9:30.

Workshop participants learn filming, sound, lighting and editing—all that's involved in producing a show, free.

One of the ideas already underway is the filming of athletic events, both school and townwide. At the meeting Tuesday, he showed a videotape of the Cohasset Roadrace By the Sea. The video opened and closed with aerial shots of the coast, Minot's Light and Cohasset Common.



The start, finish and a number of points along the way were filmed with clear, sharp color. Other than a few bumpy spots, the filming gave good coverage of the roadrace. At one point, a camera was on a moving vehicle as it filmed the runners.

Sports don't interest everyone; so the community channel tries to offer a variety.Ronan said he wants to have a listing of local art and cultural events as part of an art magazine show.

American Cablesystems always ascertains the interest of a community through a questionnaire before cable is hooked up.

Residents in most communities choose movie channels such as HBO and Show Time as their first interest,

Memorial Day parade honors Cohasset veterans

All residents and town employees are invited to participate and observe the ceremonies planned for Monday's Memorial Day observance.

The American Legion George H. Mealy Post will have a contigent marching to the Cohasset cemeteries, to pay tribute to Cohasset's deceased veterans.

Post members and residents wil begin the march at the Post at 8:30 a.m. Monday. From that location, they will march past the Pratt Library to the Hingham Cohasset line where a memorial service and floral wreath will be placed at the cemetery.

From North Cohasset, the contigent will travel to the Woodside Cemetery where another service will be observed. The next stop on the parade route will be Beechwood Cemetery and another memorial service. The marchers will then proceed up Sohier Street to the Music Circus.

According to William A. Spiers, post commander, the parade is expected to arrive at the Music Circus at about 10:30 a.m. At that location, the band from the Osgood School will accompany the marchers through the next section of the route.

They will travel past the Osgood School to Main Street to the Central Cemetery. Following another service, the marchers will file past the Common and on to the Veterans Memorial across the street from the George Mealy Post.

The parade should arrive at this location about noon, Spiers said. A floral wreath will be tossed into the harbor, in remembrance of Cohasset residents who have died at sea. Warren Demers of Quincy, First Vice Commander of the Norfolk County American Legion, will speak at the services there.

A flag dedicated to the memory of a Cohasset veteran will be flown from the tall flagpole at the memorial site.

Commander Spiers said the American Legion Post has been following this solemn Memorial Day observance since the Post was chartered in 1920.

The Cohasset Post was dedicated to the memory of George Mealy who died in 1918 in Fismere, France. Although Mealy was buried there, there is a memorial gravestone with his name in the Central Cemetery. Each Memorial Day, individual flags are placed on the graves of all Cohasset veterans, Spers said.

The commander noted the extensive cooperation of the town and town employees in helping coordinate Memorial Day observances. "I'm grateful to them and wish to ask any employee or resident of Cohasset to participate in Monday's activities," he added.

McArthur enters recount case

Responding to a plea issued by three attorneys, Dedham Superior Court Judge Henry Abrams said he would push for a speedy trial date to determine the fate of Cohasset's April election.

Boston attorney John Mason entered the case Friday, representing Mary Jane McArthur, the incumbent selectman who three weeks ago was declared the winner of the election recount by a two-vote margin.

Although plaintiff Doris Golden did not name McArthur in her original civil litigation against the Board of Registrars, the incumbent entered the case so that arguments could be filed in her behalf against the challenges made in the Golden complaint.

Atty. Mason filed a cross complaint this week against the original complaint filed two weeks ago by Golden's attorney, William McDermott.

In the original complaint, Golden alleged the Board of Registrars failed to perform their duties April 14 by: denying certain registered voters access to ballots by failing to deliver absentee ballots; allowing McArthur to remain inside the voting area to greet voters; failing to count one absentee ballot which would have affected the outcome of the election; allowing the ballot box

Cohasset's week . . .

No Housing Authority article

The Board of Selectmen decided that since no specific location for Chapter 705 Scattered Site Housing has been determined, there will be no article submitted for the special town meeting warrant by the Housing Authority.

Executive Secretary Mark Lanza informed the authority members that in order for a warrant article to be proposed which would transfer land from a private party or the Board of Selectmen to the Housing Authority, there must be a specified site. Since there is none, it is inappropriate to include a warrant article, he said.

In a letter to selectmen April 20, the Housing Authority members stated their application for Chapter 705 funds is being considered even though no site has been proposed. "The impression given to us at the meeting (April 11 with Office of Community Development officials) was that we should have a definite proposal ready to accompany the application," the authority's letter stated.

"It is the opinion of the Housing Authority that action must be taken under Chapter 705 and acquisition of property be made. This fall could bring about our last reprieve," the members concluded.

In Lanza's reply to the Housing Authority he stated, "the Board of Selectmen will compile a list of all town-owned land and evaluate which parcels if any, could most appropriately be utilized as Chapter 705 housing sites, and submit it to the Housing Authority as soon as possible."

Health insurance for town

Selectmen agreed May 16 to take two bids — one from Blue Cross/Blue Shield, the other from Medical East for town employee group health coverage from July 1, 1984 to June 30, 1985 under advisement before making a decision.

George McCullough of the Insurance Committee, introduced the two bids to selectmen. He asked Kathy Burns, representing Blue Cross, Blue Shield, to look into a "cost-containment program" for the town.

Selectmen asked if the town could get a policy to join a county group plan. Cohasset's rates are one of the highest because it is one of the smallest towns and the last three, four years it has had bad claim experience, selectmen observed.

For Cohasset to be part of Norfolk County's plan, the town would have to petition to be in such a plan.

For a county plan to be beneficial, it would have to be mandatory for all towns, McCullough said, because towns with bad experience turn to county plans to get better rates.

Cohasset presently has 143 employees on a major medical plan under Blue Cross. The town contributes 50% of the coverage at premium costs.

Library grant

At the board meeting May 11, of the South Shore Chapter of the National Organization for Women, a NOW Educational Grant was awarded to the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. The grant will be used to purchase fiction and non-fiction books, especially those presenting non-traditional role models for children. Among those books to be purchased are: "Golden Girls: True Stories of Olympic Women Stars," "An Eye on the World: Margaret Bourke—White, Photographer," and "My Mother Sends Her Wisdom."

Guidelines to pond problems

Now is the time of year when the algae growth in Straits Pond begins to develop. Nutrient loading of the pond, along with seasonally optimal light and weather conditions, creates the perfect flourishing environment for various strains of algae.

The nutrient loading of the pond can be affected by the actions of direct abutters as well as those upgrade. Fertilizer used on lawns, shrubs, and gardens may get washed out into the pond during rainy periods. This will increase the nutrient loading.

Disposing of brush, leaves or grass clippings in the pond will also increase the loading. Septic tansk should be pumped at least every two years so that nutrients from the system are not allowed to enter the pond.

Cesspools may need to be pumped more often, particularly during the times of heavy precipitation. Animals should not be permitted to wade in the pond and animal droppings should be scooped from lawns before they are washed into the pond.

Reminder to mooring owners

Mooring fees are due and payable by June 1 of each calendar year. Failure to pay the fee on time is cause for mooring tackle to be removed from the harbor at owner's expense and the mooring space will be re-assigned to persons on the waiting list.

It is unlawful to place a boat of larger size on a mooring without permission of the harbormaster. The only boat that can be attached to a mooring is the boat registered and on file with the harbormaster.

Failure to comply with the mooring regulations of the harbor will automatically terminate mooring space assignments.

Post office plea

Last year, a number of letter carriers in the Greater Boston area were bitten by dogs. One carrier was so severely bitten that it took 30 stitches to close the wound and complications from the injury kept him incapacitated for three months.

Fonseca emphasized that the Postal Service has the right to protect its letter carriers by withholding mail delivery to households with an unrestrained dog. In areas where dogs roam loose, delivery to an entire neighborhood can be curtailed. Postal customers should also be aware that the Postal Service now seeks legal action against dog owners to recover costs incurred by dog bites.

Town to motion for dismissal registers which were defective to be used; and failing to seal the ballot box immediately after the election.

In the second count against the town, Golden alleged fifteen ballots and one absentee ballot were protested by Golden as being improperly rejected as defective and not counted; the registers made substantial errors of fact and rulings of law during the review of the 16 ballots; one ballot was not counted, thereby disenfranchising a good faith voter; the votes cast for Golden were counted as blanks or for McArthur, and the votes cast as blanks were counted for McArthur.

Atty. McDermott was pleased that Judge Abrams agreed the case is of such importance that it will be scheduled within three weeks. All pleadings must be entered by June 1, with an expected trial date estimated for June 4. Judge Abrams will not preside at that trial.

McDermott said he is busy preparing pleas and pre-trial motions, and is "ready right now" to enter the courtroom.

Town Counsel Richard Henderson, said he will likely enter a motion to dismiss the first count of the Golden complaint. Saying the challenge is without legal merit, Henderson said the actions of the Board of Registrars during the April 14 election did not cause any imperfections in the election outcome. If the first count of the complaint was dismissed, it would reduce court time, pre- trial motions, and legal costs, he said.

The town counsel estimated if the first count was dismissed by a Norfolk County Superior Court judge, the legal fees to be borne by the town would total about $2500. If a motion to dismiss is denied and both allegations are allowed, the legal fees based on more lengthy trial preparations, would double, he said.

Judge Abrams approved three motions entered by the attorneys last week. One was that the 16 contested ballots be brought under the custody of the clerk of Dedham Superior Court. They were delivered Monday by Henderson and Police Chief Joseph Kealey. A second order issued by Judge Abrams was that all pleadings and pre-trial motions be filed by June 1.

A third condition approved by the judge was that McDermott and Mason be allowed to inspect the ballots before the trial date.

The three attorneys requested a trial date be scheduled June 4, and indications are that it will be set close to that day, Henderson added.

Golden house parties held

Bill Golden, candidate for State Senator, received a warm welcome from Cohasset residents at two house parties held in the town last week.

Rosemary Murphy and Kay Mulcahy co-hosted a house party at the Murphy house at 8 Stanton Road. Alice Daunt held a mini-reunion for classmates of Bill at her house at 12 Todd Road.

At the house parties, Bill spoke out for a strong regional identity for the South Shore. "It's a question of political clout on Beacon Hill," he said. "If the people who live on the coast don't work to protect it, who will?" he asked.

Bill challenged Cohasset residents to develop a vision for the future of the town, and to work for that goal. He stressed the need for cooperation in solving our regional problems. "We should look not at the differences we have, but at what we can agree on."

He identified transportation, economic growth, and education as key problems to solve. He spoke out against having legalized casino gambling in Hull, and in favor of rules reform at the State House.

"I would like to thank my close friends and former teachers for inviting me into their homes, and for the opportunity to meet again with my old friends and former neighbors," Bill said after the house parties.

Bill is a resident of Weymouth. He has worked at local, state, and federal levels of government, and has worked in the private sector for ten years. He is most recently known as the attorney who was responsible for the successful suit against the MDC to force the cleanup of Boston Harbor and South Shore waters.

Selectmen's briefs . . .

License for SS Music Circus

Selectmen voted unanimously May 16 to grant the South Shore Music Circus a Sunday entertainment license for the 1984 season, and a common victualler's and Sunday common victualler's license.

Although selectmen usually do not issue an operating license until they have received police, fire, and other required inspection results, the board decided to grant the license since they have two "leverage approvals" if the Music Circus fails to pass required inspections. Those two approvals are a final occupancy permit and a final health agent inspection.

The Sunday entertainment license will be issued for 13 Sundays.

Conduits tabled

Selectmen tabled two motions at the May 16 meeting for New England Telephone to install underground conduit and area connector terminals in two town locations.

Paul Colandrea, representing New England Telephone, agreed the plans needed to be reviewed again by company engineers after hearing suggestions from the selectmen and residents.

The first plan concerned a request to install an area connector terminal on Chief Justice Cushing Way (Rte. 3A) and an underground conduit on Pond St.

A Pond St. resident questioned running the conduit to telephone pole #38 and proposed running the conduit to pole #39 which would actually be closer to the proposed 3A connector terminal.

Colandrea said he was sure the engineers who drew up the plan had a reason for running the conduit to pole #38 although he did not know why. He explained the objective for installing area terminals was to eliminate as much air cable as possible and to remove deteriorating air cable that has been causing trouble.

The second request from New England Telephone concerned an underground conduit in Elm St. and Highland Ave. and a connector terminal on Highland Ave.

Selectman Rocco Laugelle questioned the plan's placement of a manhole in the sidewalk, and asked Colandrea why the manhole could not be placed in the street instead.

Manholes are usually placed as far off the road as possible in case roads are widened, Colandrea said.

"Since you have to cross the street anyway...why not put the manhole in the street rather than on somebody's lawn," Laugelle said.

Colandrea asked to take this plan to his engineers for redesign of the manhole in the sidewalk to show it in the street. He agreed further with selectmen Laugelle's suggestion of a potential law suit from a pedestrian if the manhole cover were in the sidewalk.

In response to selectmen's concern for the town's appearance, Colandrea reassured the board that New England Telephone would landscape the above-ground terminals.

No vote on parking

Selectmen refused to vote at their May 16 meeting on developer Donald Staszko's request to change town bylaw parking space requirements through an article for the June 18 special town meeting.

Staszko told the board the town's requirement of 10 parking spaces for 1,000 square feet of retail space was too strict and not in line with the rest of the Commonwealth. For his proposed Rte 3A shopping plaza, Staszko would like to have approximately 370 parking spaces; however, the town bylaws require him to provide 587 spaces for his 58,743 square feet of retail space.

"I dont't want to put a sea of pavement out there," Staszko said.

Chairman Clifford Mitman told Staszko since his decision was pending with the zoning board of appeals, the selectmen could be overstepping their ground if they went beyond them.

"I would not vote to override the ZBA," selectman Rocco Laugelle said.

Staszko, citing his concern for the timeliness of his request since interest rates continue to increase, told the board, "You don't share my concern." Jobs and tax revenue are benefits to the town through the proposed plaza project, Staszko said.

"We do want to encourage development where it makes sense . . . we have a rational board to react with this. I don't want to circumvent a board," Mitman replied.

"Go to the ZBA and if you don't get a variance, go to town meeting," Laugelle advised Staszko.

Museum tour May 24

The Cohasset Historical Society and the Cohasset Recreation Department will sponsor a special pre-season guided tour of the Historical Society's two museums on Elm Street in Cohasset Center.

The date is Thursday, May 24, and the time will be 11 a.m. This marks the third year of combined sponsorship of special museum tours by the two groups.

To register, please call the Cohasset Recreation Department's office at the Town Hall at 383-6791, as early as possible. There will be a $1.00 per person donation at the door. The tour will meet at the Maritime Museum.

Featured will be visits to the Captain John Wilson Historical House and the Maritime Museum both located on Elm Street in Cohasset village.

Connell has 'borne all the burdens'

Former Weymouth State Rep. William Connell, Jr. will be a candidate for the Democratic nomination for State Senator in the Norfolk and Plymouth district. The district includes the South Shore towns of Weymouth, Hingham, Hull, Cohasset, Scituate, Marshfield and Duxbury.

Connell served ten terms in the Massachusetts House of Representatives from 1955-1976 where he was House Chairman of the Committee on Election Laws and later, House Chairman of the Committee on Banks and Banking.

In 1976, Connell did not seek reelection, choosing rather to establish his own insurance agency in Weymouth, located at 33 Union St., South Weymouth and at One Batterymarch Park in Quincy at the National Fire Protection Association Building off Willard Street in the West End of that city.

He is married to the former Joan Cramond of Quincy and they have four children, Ann Marie, Maureen Ellen, Susan Jean and William III.

Connell is a member of various insurance trade associations, including the Professional Insurance Agents of New England, the Independent Insurance Agents of Massachusetts and the Boston Life Underwriters Associations. The former representative cited his continuous residence in the district and his love and concern for its seacoast towns. During his lifetime he summered in the Fieldston section of Marshfield, the Cohasset Village section of Cohasset, the Strawberry Hill section of Hull, the Minot section of North Scituate, owned property in North Scituate on Whitcomb Road and was lifeguard at North Scituate Beach in the summer between his junior and seniors years at Holy Cross College.

A former Weymouth Selectman, School Committeeman, Assessor, and elected Town Meeting Member, Connell cited his demonstrated willingness to start at the lower level political positions in order to "learn and earn" the promotions to higher-level elected offices.

Connell volunteered three times for active duty in the United States Navy, the first time serving as an Electrician's Mate 3rd Class on the heavy cruiser USS Baltimore, which he had worked upon earlier as a shipyard worker.

Connell graduated from Midshipman School at Northwestern University, Chicago, Illinois.

Born in South Boston, Connell has lived in Weymouth all of his life.

"I've always wanted to be the State Senator for this district. It was the obvious next step for a 20 year veteran of the House of Representatives, but my friend Sen. Allan McKinnon was very effectively occupying the Senate seat. Therefore, there was no opportunity for the past 13 years for me to take the next step up the political ladder during that period.

"Now that Sen. McKinnon has announced that he is not seeking reelection, I hope that the people of this district will consider rewarding and promoting someone who has borne the burdens of taking all of the steps up the ladder of public service.

William Connell Jr.

"I hope that I can demonstrate to the people of this district in the coming months that I've prepared to be their State Senator in the old fashioned way . . . by having earned it . . . one step at a time," Connell concluded.

Aleph class

There will be a Maccabiah (games and competition) in honor of Lag Ba'aomer following the assembly. Parents are welcome to attend. For more information, please call the Temple at 749-8103.

☐ Rosemary and Joe Laugelle had a grand time recently, he went to Chicago to partake the festivities as their son, Joey, graduated from bootcamp. The graduation was at the Great Lakes Base, and they were two very proud parents! Joe reports that they all had a great time, it was great to see Joey again! From there Joey will go to Memphis, Tennessee, where he will be studying aircraft.

☐ If you had the opportunity to go down Beach Street during the past week, then you noticed the work that was done by a group of dedicated students...twenty people shared in the cleanup of the rocks that had all of the graffiti on it. John Replogle reported that it was certainly worth the efforts they all went through, it looks so much better. Let's hope no furture graduates think it is important to put their graduating year on nature's handiworks. It is a known fact there is a class graduating every year; let us all enjoy what this group of people tried so hard to put back to nature.

☐ Anyone who had a pal living in Scituate was in luck this past weekend, as they got to watch the sports channel on the cable television. Just an example of what we will have to look forward to...

☐ Here's hoping that Torin Sweeney is on the mend and will soon be his old self...after a mishap and recent surgery, at least we can report that he is out of the hospital! More good news is sure to come, hope everything is mending faster than was predicted, Torin. One thing that is very hard to do, chimney work with an arm in a sling.

☐ Carol "Bobbie" Chaplinski, recently joined the Cohasset office of the Jack Conway Co. as a sales associate, according to office manager Muriel Desmond.

Prior to relocating to Cohasset, Bobbie was a special education teacher in Maryland. Originally from New York City, she attended New York University. Currently, Bobbie is active in the Cohasset PTO and is a high school class sponsor. She and her husband, Joseph, have four children.

Donna Batts lends her assistance at last week's fair at The Common, to daughters (l. to r.) Elise, 4, Megumi, 7, and Kerri,

☐ Had a call from Jerry Ainslie, who wanted everyone to be reminded of the eighth annual antique show that is being held on June 2. Presented by the Beechwood Congregational Church, Jerry reports that it has a "new look, new location", with the show being located at the Deer Hill School. Tickets are available at the door or from church members, and there will be a snack bar. The doors open at 9 a.m. and close at 9 p.m. Parking is free so be sure to get there.

☐ Hurray for Michael Cisneros, a fifth grader at Deer Hill School who made his mark in the New England Mathematics League Contest recently. Michael tied for first place among Norfolk County students, and tied for sixth place amound New England students. Another factor that was considered was age, as he is a year younger than most of the sixth grade winners. Deer Hill tied for 22nd place out of 619 schools participating, and was ranked number one in Norfolk County. Other students on the Deer Hill team were Allison Kornet, Zachary Hochkeppel, Kerri Anglin and Noah Hill. Great job and congratulations to all of the winners.

☐ There is another winner in the school system, this time at the High School, and the student is Staci Stobart. Staci is a Junior and has been chosen as one of 27 National Patriotic Service Committee of the National Society of the Colonial Dames of America. During the week of June 17—23, Staci and 26 other winners will attend a Congressional seminar in Washington, D.C. Staci will be presented a Certificate of Merit while there.

☐ Don Beale certainly has been a busy gent these past few weeks. He is the one responsible for running the Mahoney and Wright Insurance Tournament. Every year it is an event that local golfers look forward to. They have a great day and the proceeds go toward a scholarship. Details next week...

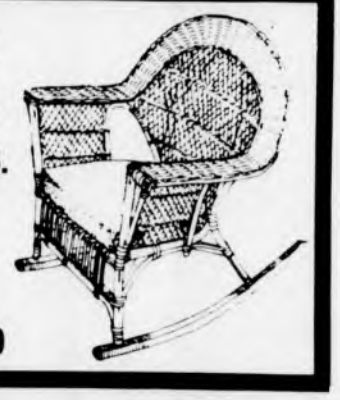
☐ Sounds like it will be a fun summer for hockey "nuts"...Mike O'Connell has formed a new league, the Pro-Am League, that will play at the Quincy Youth Arena. Five hundred players tried out to play in the league, for spots on several different squads. College, NHL players and high school players will all be there, should be great fun to watch. The schedule opens June 4 with the high school division playing on Mondays and Thursdays; Juniors (skaters that are expected to be chosen in next month's NHL draft) on Tuesdays and Seniors on Wednesdays. Tickets will be on sale at the door.

☐ Don't forget the PSO annual meeting, to be held at 7 p.m. tonight in the High School Cafeteria. The program promises to be good, with Dr. Bart O'Connor speaking on the State Department of Education's master plan for the arts, and how to incorporate arts into our school programs with limited funding.

☐ Had a chat with Al Odermatt recently, and he was most upset. It seems that the Red Cross flag, loaned to the town for the month to be flown at the Common, was stolen! No one can understand why people can steal flags. It is almost time to return it back to the Red Cross. Here's hoping that whoever "borrowed" it will return it.

☐ Michelle Hartley, daughter of Kenneth and Sandy Hartley of Arrowwood Road, recently won the 12-14 age group in the Class II of the State Gymnastics meet.

Michelle, a sixth grader at the Deer Hill School received an all-around score of 69. She has attended the Kathy Corrigan School of gymnastics for four years. In fact, the entire Corrigan team won first place at the meet.



The youngster will now represent Massachusetts in the New England Regional Meet in Portland, Me. June 2 and 3. Among the local gymnasts from the Corrigan School who qualified for the New England meet are Michelle Noble of Scituate, Terri Mathson of Duxbury and Heather Lawson.

Richardson has dialogue with local voters

By Judy Gilman

Elliot Richardson came to Hingham Town Hall Monday night to hold what he called a dialogue with South Shore voters. And the small but enthusiastic group seemed well-satisfied with this appearance of one of the two GOP candidates for the Senatorial seat being vacated by retiring Paul Tsongas.

Richardson is rather a man for all seasons. Some might even say he's had rather the same career as the character of Pooh-Bah in the recent Mikado production in Hingham. Pooh-Bah, if you'll recall, was known as the Lord High Everything Else to Ko—Ko's Lord High Executioner. The number of positions Richardson has held over the years, since he started out long ago as a Brookline town meeting member ("probably my most important position") is truly mind-boggling. Clerk to two Supreme Court Justices, including Felix Frankfurter. Aide to Sen. Leverett Saltonstall. Cabinet Secretary to five Presidents (covering seven departments, if, as he said you count what was HEW (Health, Education and Welfare) when he was at the helm as what it is now, the separate departments of Health and Human Services and Education). On the international scene, he has been extremely active in the Law of the Sea Conference. He's headed the United Nations Association of the U.S. He's been deputy secretary of state. And the list could go on and on.

"I'm genuinely more interested in your views than in answering the same familiar questions that, six months from now, are going to seem very stale indeed," Richardson told the gathering of about five dozen South Shore residents.

He outlined four points he considers major planks in his campaign. They include: the question of peace and conflict prevention; the competitiveness of Massachusetts; environmental problems, and making government work to get problems solved.

On the last item, he said, "I know how to get things done, the people to see, where to go. It's very good to have cooperation, the kind of cooperation we had when we had one Republican and one Democratic senator (harking back to his days as aide to Saltonstall--John F. Kennedy was the Democrat). Both senators always worked together on things for Massachusetts. That way, someone was always working his side of the aisle."

QUESTIONS

A Marshfield campaign worker asked what Richardson's response would be to a common reply to campaign workers: that voters feel Richardson is a solid candidate of experience and integrity, but that his rival, Ray Shamie, is closer to the people and their wants.

In reply, Richardson said he had never been out of touch with the voters of Massachusetts, coming back to his home state regularly. "The problems that affect us all are broad problems, that affect other states as well," he said.

He added that good intentions are all very well, but the ability to translate those into jobs is the bottom line. "I have friends everywhere in government," Richardson said, "and those friendships are based on mutual respect of abilities."

Stuart deBard of Hingham asked what Richardson's stand on the MX missile and the proposed Star Wars systems is. The candidate returned the ball by asking the questioner's views on the same subject. "I don't believe we need or can afford the MX or the Star Wars system," deBard replied.

Does the candidate support the American pullout from UNESCO, the UN agency that has become a sometimes radical spokesman of the Third World? Richardson said he had recommended to the Reagan administration that a watchdog committee be formed to keep an eye on UNESCO, with the thought in mind of rejoining if "they straighten up their act." That suggestion has been adopted by the administration.

Richardson said he shares most positions of other England GOP senators, though "Lowell Weiker (of Connecticut) is to the left of me."

Harold Goldstein of Hingham asked Richardson if he would support a national Prop. 2½ that would place a cap on the federal budget. Richardson said he wouldn't support such a move, that the government couldn't be put in a "strait jacket." "Where is the 'give'?" he asked. But, he continued, "I would avoid diluting (government's) responsibility. I'd keep their feet to the fire and hold them accountable (for their budgets)."

On Georges Bank drilling, Richardson said the choice boils down to weighing costs against benefits. "When I was secretary of commerce, everyone always wanted everything made in the U.S. to be the best possible quality at the cheapest price made in the best possible working conditions with the least impact on the environment while the workers were getting constantly increasing wages and capital was being put back into the plants. There are always tradeoffs," he said.

Remembrances

As a child, Memorial Day was one of those vague holidays. No presents, fireworks or bountiful suppers. A day off from school; usually a bright, warm day. A perfect day to visit our family members now deceased, lying beneath fields of green, beside perfectly formed rows of gravestones.

A view from any hillside overlooking the cemetery reminds us of so many soldiers standing in precession.

Visiting the graves of our families was not an unhappy occasion. Bringing geraniums to decorate the grave markings, digging into the earth, silently reciting a prayer in solitude.

The white stone marking the graves of so many ill-fated veterans stand out in the pastures of green. How beautiful they appear on Memorial Day - dotted with small colorful flags that unfurl to brisk attention in the late spring wind.

Mothers and fathers proudly stand at attention near the still graves. All is calm except for the sudden snap of the flags. Brothers, fathers, uncles, who fought with a courage most children can't envision; most women can't comprehend.

Mothers explain to questioning children the heroics of brave Uncle John, who died in a plane crash during a bombing raid somewhere in a distant land.

The courage of a soldier is not understood in a visit to his grave. But somehow we grow closer to the memory of our men who offered their lives for the brothers, sisters, fathers, and mothers who mourn their loss today.

It's been many years since Uncle John's death. Now nieces and nephews come to the grave of this man who died too young. They retain the sadness of the family; and hope for an end to all conflicts which bring more white stone markings crowded across the green field.

Cohasset remembers its lost veterans Monday with a parade that winds throughout the town. This small contingent from the American Legion Post proudly attends to our deceased men of wars. Everyone is invited to participate, and certainly to observe. The parade begins at 8:30 a.m. at the George Mealy Post.

Since Monday's Memorial Day, the Mariner ought to have all its advertisements and news copy at the office by Friday afternoon.

The Mariner will be open Monday but the mail won't be available and, beyond that, the staff needs time to go outside and watch the parade and take part in Memorial Day observation.

Otherwise our schedule is the same...except that this week we wish you a safe, happy and meaningful Memorial Day.

The stranding of the Glasgow

By Robert Fraser

To pay for the recent French wars, the English Government imposed all sorts of taxes upon her peoples. The last straw was when Parliament allowed the private East India Company a monopoly on tea and the right to levy taxes on its sale. The Americans showed their annoyance of this by destroying boxes on the hated beverage. Understandably upset, Parliament chose Boston, then the richest seaport in the New World, as an example and bottled it up tight until the tea was paid for (it never was.) Troops of Redcoats were stationed in Boston while a squadron of the Royal Navy cruised just offshore.

Among the British warships was the sixth-rate armed vessel "Glasgow." She was the smallest type of frigate and often called a "post-ship" for it was the lowest rate that a captain could be "posted" to or command. The "Glasgow" had been launched in mid-1757 at Hull England and she measured 120 feet long in the hull and had a beam of 30-and-one-half-feet. She was also of 452 tons burden. This is not a weight, but her cubic measurement as expressed by the number of tons (casks) of wine which could be jammed into her empty hull. Her commander while off Boston was Captain William Maltby.

On the morning of December 10, 1774, the people of Cohasset awoke to find the "Glasgow" on their doorsteps. During the night, she had been driven ashore by a storm, losing her rudder. Just where she was wrecked and what happened afterwards is a matter of conjecture. There is hardly anything to be found in the British Admiralty records and local histories are completely silent.

Things were going from bad to worse in Anglo-American relations, but a full fledged independence movement had yet to be created. Nor did anyone want to start something. The Cohasset militia numbered about 75 men who were armed with a variety of old muskets. The "Glasgow" had a crew of 130 men with the latest types of weapons, and the vessel was armed with twenty 9-pounder cannon. The cannon themselves each weighed about 800 pounds, but they were classed by the weight of shot they fired - in this case, a solid iron sphere of 9 pounds. The shot could travel a mile and a half doing considerable destruction along the way. At this time, most of the trees in Cohasset had been axed down to provide material for houses and fishing boats as well as clearing the land for farms. Thus, the warship had a clear shot at any part of the village. Had any trouble erupted, the cannon would quickly and easily reduce the entire town to splinters. So both the Cohasseters and Britishers ignored each other. Probably, a few local Tories sent some food and supplies over to the stranded warship.

Ultimately, in March of 1775, the "Glasgow" was hauled off and taken to Boston for repairs. For the storm and the three months she had been beached, the warship had very minor damage. But the Admiralty showed their displeasure by dismissing Maltby from service. He was replaced by Lieutenant Tyringham Howe and his rank reduced the vessel's status from frigate to sloop-of-war (corvette).

'Glasgow' By Richard Dabrowski

The "Glasgow" then served as part of the fleet backing up the British Army's attack on Bunker Hill in June, 1775. The following month, she was off Nantucket protecting British merchant ships from American privateers and State Navy warships. In August of 1775, she was stationed at Rhode Island. Then, the "Glasgow" appears to have left New England waters.

In 1778, France and Spain entered the American Revolution on our side, not so much to help us as to grap up some of Britian's rich colonies. Not too well known is the fact that there were many sharp and bitter battles in the West Indies between the British and French or Spanish. The "Glasgow" was one of many small warships sent to protect these British islands. Her end came on June 19, 1779, while at anchor in Montego Bay on the northwest side of Jamaica. She accidently caught fire, burnt out, and sank.

Letters

Recount court case debate

Point

(The following is a letter written lasts week by Golden to the Cohasset voters,—Ed.)

"First and foremost, I would like to thank each and every concerned citizen in the Town of Cohasset who supported and voted for my candidacy in the recent election.

As you are well aware, it has been a long hard campaign which has not yet ended. I have made the decision after much consultation amongst my many friends and supporters to pursue the election recount through the appeal process. It has been a difficult time for me these past ten days to find myself now in a position where I have two fewer votes than I had election night. Upon the ballots being reviewed, there appears to be discrepancies on fifteen ballots that have since been impounded.

In fairness to the entire election process and the voters of the Town of Cohasset, these ballots must be reviewed by people who have had far more experience than the dedicated officials who worked under the stressful situation for the first time in the history of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts when there was a dead tie for the office of Selectman.

In conclusion, I want you, the concerned citizens of the Town of Cohasset, to know the reason I am pursuing this appeal—to inusre all candidates and voters alike that the election process is a value to be held high.

Thank you for your continued support."

Doris Golden

Counterpoint

To the Editor:

The town has just recovered from the long and expensive tennis court suit and now it is faced by another: Doris Golden's suit.

Since my letter of two weeks ago, I have received a couple of phone calls from people who pointed out to me that Mrs. Golden is spending her own money for this suit. They would not accept the fact that taxpayers' money—a minimum of $2500—will now have to be spent to defend this case.

May I repeat that Mrs. Golden could better serve the town by accepting her defeat and running again in a future election? Her funds would be more effectively spent on campaign expenses, and the town would benefit by the money saved in unjustified legal costs.

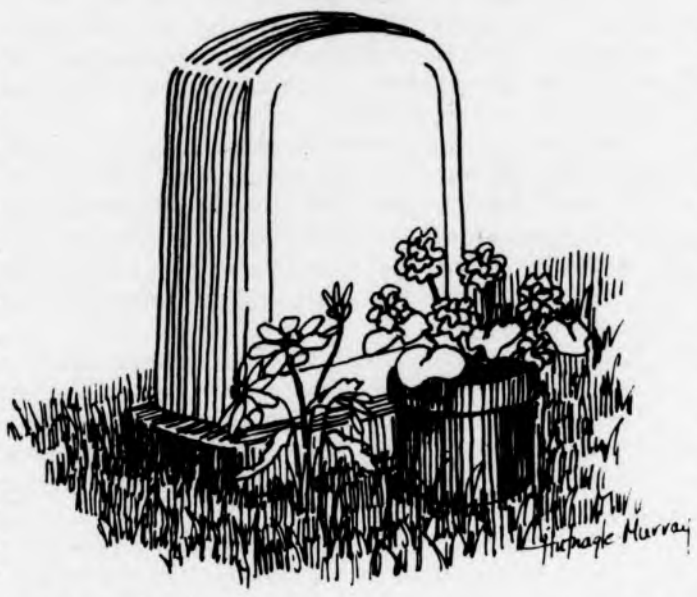
Nostalgia

Decoration Day is remembered

By Dorothy Squier

You could depend on the weather. The 30th of May always turned out hot. Winter clothes had been aired and cleaned and put away in moth balls, and the summer clothes all freshly washed and ironed, white shoes and bags ready.

"We'll start out early to avoid the crowds and the heat of the day," Mama said. "We'll take the watering can and garden tools and buy our plants on the way in."



There was never a question of not going; all six daughters had to go. Mama expected it and we obeyed, even in later years when we had planned picnic dates or trips to the beach. We went first to the cemetery.

When Papa died in 1918 he was buried on Myosotis Path in Cambridge Cemetery, surrounded by deceased friends and neighbors. Mama bought a pretty pink marble stone of a respectable size with simple carving and his name, George Alexander McKay, and the dates. Not many years later, my oldest sister Elizabeth died, and her name was added to the stone.

For years we followed the same schedule, making our own family tradition, taking the trolley car stopping to price the bright plants from the numerous vendors lining the street, and to ask about the cut flowers in tin vases with spikes on the bottom you could so easily push them into the ground.

I always opted for the easy way, but Chrissie loved to dig in the earth and they all outvoted me anyhow. They chose red geraniums and blue alyssum.

As we turned into the gates, on our left the stream of cars and people grew as they thronged into the prestigious Mount Auburn Cemetery across the street. By the time we reached our family headstone we were hot and foot-weary. We dug up the sparse, sandy excuse for grass and planted our Memorial blossoms.

"It's getting too hot for that jacket, Esther. You'd better take it off." Mama was wearing black, as usual, yet she never looked hot. Her dress was a black and white print worn with a neat little black straw hat, her gray pug tilting up the back brim.

Like a stage director, she told us where and how to plant and when to get more water. Her voice was kindly and we didn't resent the ordrs, although sometimes we remonstrated when we thought we knew more than she did. Perish the thought!

Families were gathering at neighboring plots, and we visited and chatted with them and remarked sadly on the fresh graves that year. It was a peaceful, unhurried time.

Now the time was nearing for the parades to come marching in between the gates to decorate the soldiers graves. Our cousin, Jimmy, killed in World War I, was buried here. The sound of bands playing came faintly from a distance and we decided to get away before they broke ranks.

Mama led the prayers, of course, as we all knelt and prayed for the repose fo the souls of our loved ones. We walked over the the roadside faucet, washed our hands and tools and started the trek down to the trolley.

Home once more and the day was ours, our duty fulfilled and our consciences, clear. Soon we were off to dates with friends and beaux, to sit on the rocks at Nahant or to take the boat ride to Nantasket.

As we left the house, Mama called after us, "Don't be late for supper now, I'm making a strawberry shortcake."

She knew how to get us back on time. And she was satisfied. Her family had remembered and honored their dead.

Local programming explained

he said. But Cohasset residents chose arts and culture at the top of the list.

In Scituate, the Historical Society president gave tours of all the historical sites and was filmed as she walked through the tours, General Manager Steve Farquhar said.

Cohasset Historical Society curator David Wadsworth attended the meeting Tuesday. Ronan said the society could give documentaries on the town's history.

Fire Chief Martin Dooley asked about regional programming, asking if surrounding towns could share training programs. American Cablesystems has contracts in Scituate, Hingham, Hull, Norwell and Hanover.

Ronan said this is just one of the possibilities of regional programming on the local channel.

Cohasset Firefighter Tom Finnegan has been taking the workshop and hopes to present fire prevention and safety tips on the air, he said. This show could be regionalized.

American Cablesystems is planning to make a show produced in Scituate by its residents available on a regional basis. The show, TV Trivia, is broadcast live and people call in with answers to trivia questions asked on the show.

On the strictly local level, Ronan hopes to have a gardening show and a cooking show. As long as a home or town building has a cable hookup, an event can be filmed on location, he said. Cohasset could soon have its own gourmet cooks producing a 'Julia Childs' style show.

There are limitless opportunities with panel discussions and political forums, he said. Residents with opposing views could discuss a controversial issue and take calls from viewers. It's like writing a letter to the editor and getting immediate feedback.

Cable Advisory Council Chairman David Chittim urged representatives from the various organizations to become involved in community programming. Having cable TV "is like the day when the railroad came to Cohasset. This is going to affect all the people in Cohasset one way or another.

"It's quite a resource for the town. I think secretly from the first, we like American Cablesystems." The town is fortunate to have a cable company that has contracts with most of the surrounding towns, he said. The sweep of this area by one company is rare and benefits local programming in all towns, Chittim said.

Dr. John Packard, the schools' media services director said students have taken the workshops and are hoping for a cable TV studio in school. As part of the agreement with the town, American Cablesystems gave the schools $17,000 worth of equipment.

Speech classes and sporting events have already been filmed by students. They've learned editing and filming, Packard said.

Television "has had a history of getting something from us; it's seen as an intrusive thing," Packard said. "Now you can push out from it. You can be the one who's behind the camera. You can be the energy."

Who snatched the stool?

It was a wonderful day for the Cohasset Historical Society. Last Saturday was bright, sunny and warm, and people flocked to the Flea Market in search of bargains.

As Historical Society President Connie Parker noted, they could have sold the clothes off their backs. The eighth annual flea market netted a record $1700 for the Historical Society - which pleased just about everyone, except one.

It seems a woman who generously volunteered her time to sell items at the flea market, brought along her trusted Hagerty stool. She has problems with her leg and must exercise it continuously while she sits. The stool accompanies her if she is to spend a lengthy time sitting in one place, Connie explained.

Well, the volunteer left her post at the flea market for a few minutes; a deadly mistake if one is to remain the owner of one's possessions at a flea market.

Sure enough, when she returned, someone had sold her stool for $7.50. Nevermind the menial price tag, she needed that high stool. Hagerty's no longer manufactures the piece, and it would probably cost about $60 if it was reproduced (that lucky customer got a real bargain!).

Connie is frantic to find the original, or a suitable substitute for the hapless ex-owner. If anyone knows the whereabouts of this ten-year old, high Hagerty four-legged stool that was bought Saturday, please contact Connie Parker at 383-0773.

No criminal charges will be brought against the purchaser, or the innocent bystander who unwittingly sold the furniture.

Doherty announces candidacy

Anna Doherty is a candidate for the Massachusetts State Senate, Norfolk-Plymouth District.

The district includes the South Shore towns of Weymouth, Hingham, Hull, Cohasset, Scituate, Marshfield and Duxbury. The seat is presently held by Alan McKinnon who will not seek re-election.

Doherty, a resident of Marshfield for more than 40 years is a practicing attorney. In announcing her candidacy, Doherty said, "The issue facing your State Senator over the next two years is clear and simple; state government must now be forced to take more fiscal responsibility. I worked hard for the passage of Proposition 2½ because it represents the beginning of tax reform in Massachusetts. Property taxes can never again be raised irresponsibly. Only the state has the power to impose broad based taxes and the state has the responsibility to fund such major services as education and the necessary rebuilding of the roads and bridges in Massachusetts."

"The Dukakis Administration must be made to understand that the citizens of this district expect and deserve effective public services, a transportation system that is sound and efficient, and basics oriented education under local control."

Doherty has worked in the political and civic areas of public service on the South Shore for many years beginning in 1961 when she was a charter member and later served as president of the Marshfield-Duxbury League of Women Voters. Involved in local, state and federal government on the South Shore, Doherty has served on a local finance committee, ran the northern district office for Congressman Hastings Keith, acting as a liason between Washington and the South Shore local governments. As an attorney she has served as a consultant to the Massachusetts Department of Mental Health.

Doherty said: "My service on the Norwell Finance Committee gave me a great deal of practical experience in matters of municipal finance. I truly believe that local governments can run their own shop.

School Committee shorts

Committee approves leave

The school committee accepted with regret a two-year leave of absence for Ann. L. Porter, a high school guidance counselor for the past two years.

Porter and her husband have accepted a two-year position with the International American School in Athens, Greece. Although in a letter to the administration, she regretted leaving Cohasset, she and her family felt it was an opportunity they could not deny.

Supt. Eugene Crowell was especially dispondent about her absence from the high school, and noted she needed only one more day after this school year to be recommended for tenure. When she comes back to the system in two years, she will be recommended for tenure after one day, Crowell assured the committee. Porter must notify the administration the spring before she returns that she intends to come back to the Cohasset school system.

Class yearbook dedication

With a bit of tongue in cheek, the class of 1984 dedicated this year's Tessahoc to the Cohasset Police Department. In its full page illustrated dedication, the senior class thanked the officers who "babysat us, chased us, hassled us, busted us ... but most of all, put up with us."

In a ceremony at the high school Monday morning, the seniors presented the yearbook to Officer Brian Noonan. The police department was honored by the dedication, he said, as representative of the close relationship that has developed during the years between the department and the boys and girls of the graduating class.

Non union contract approved

The school committee voted Monday night to approve a five and one-half percent pay increase next year for all non union personnel, including the superintendent of schools. Committee member Martha Gjesteby abstained, with a request that a formal evaluation of the superintendent be performed annually.

The non-union personnel, which includes all instructional and activity aides, nurses, bus drivers and some athletic personnel, will receive the same salary increase approved in the union contract. Under the new salary scale, Supt. Eugne Crowell will receive $49,260 the next school year.

Gjesteby echoed the complaint she issued last year when she said the superintendent should be evaluated before the contract is annually renewed. His goals for the upcoming year should be examined together with the committee's, she suggested.

Committee chairman Joseph Nedrow disagreed with the suggestion, and said the superintendent is evaluated "meeting by meeting, day to day" by committee members. Diana Kornet agreed with the chairman and noted that all members communicate any problems collectively or individually.

Gjesteby said it would not be an adversary situation, but rather she envisioned a roundtable type discussion with the superintendent and committee members to establish goals for the school system. It is important for individual committeee members and the superintento express their individual goals and set priorities, she added.

One of the primary reasons for requesting an evaluation tool, she said, could be based on the lack of budget information she was provided by the administration this year. Because she did not have proper information, she could not approve the recommended school budget, she explained.

Nedrow countered that the superintendent is probably the one person within the school system the school committee relys upon most for information and discussion pertaining to school issues. It is the one position within the system I am completely comfortable with, he explained.

Citing the lack of an evaluation for that position, Gjesteby refused to vote on the salary increase for all non union personnel.

The high school music department was honored with two awards last Saturday at the Heritage Music Festival in Newport, R.I.

Under the direction of Bryan Marks, the high school jazz concert placed third with their selection of "Swing Low Sweet Chariot," and "Twilight Zone." The 32 singers competed in the madrigal choir category.

The school band, under the direction of Jeffrey Dodge, finished first in the festival entry. The 68 musicians performed "Second Suite for Military Band" by Gustav Holst.

The two groups received Clipper ship trophies to bring back to Cohasset. In addition to their musical feats, Supt. Eugene Crowell said personnel at the motel where the students stayed overnight, commended the youngsters for their cleanliness and good behavior during their visit to Newport.

Tension builds in Mystery House contest

Remember back to Week 1 when we foolishly excluded the Cohasset Historical Society members from playing?

To be fair to everyone, we are not counting those results but we are extending the Mystery House another two weeks and then if needed, a Sudden Death Playoff.

This proposal has been agreed to by the Cohasset Historical Society and is by far the fairest to all concerned.

The correct answer last week guessed by all eight active contestants was 63 Highland Avenue which is located at the corner of Highland Avenue and Beach Street on the corner toward Little Harbor, facing the Common.

This house is known as the Samuel Bates House which was built in 1793.

Samuel Bates was born in 1744 and married in 1764 to Martha Beal. He was a shipowner, master mariner, a trader and soldier in the American Revolution.

He built his mansion house at the north end of the Common and raised it Nov. 23, 1793. Bates drowned near Brush Island Nov. 3, 1801 when his vessel struck Cohasset's treacherous ledges and sank.

Week no. 9 411 S. Main St.

Week no. 10 63 Highland Ave.

After ten weeks, we have some tight races with contestants fighting for all three places.

Still in contention for first place after ten weeks of play are Robert Leonard Sr. and Warren Pratt with eight correct answers.

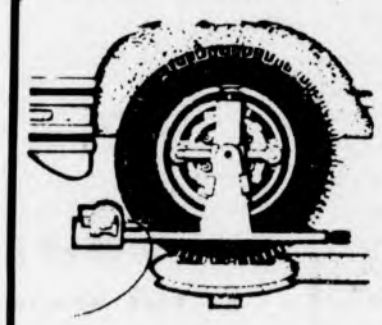
The Galt Grant family is tied with A. J. Antoine, Jr. with seven correct answers.

With six correct answers are Lillian Pierce, Betty Enders, and Verna Martini.

Hamilton Tewksbury has five correct answers.

These people are vying for the retail prizes which will be a $100 gift certificate at the Linen Chest, $50 gift certificate at Hugo's and a $25 gift certificate at Fleming's of Cohasset.

This will be Week 11 of the ten-week Mystery House Tour. Once you find the home, write down the address of the homes, exact number and street along with your name, address and phone number and send it to Box 71, Cohasset, 02025, or leave it at the Mariner dropspot at Cohasset Colonial Pharmacy or at Hennessey's News, both in Cohasset Village.



The deadline for weekly entries will be 9:30 a.m. sharp.

Remembers, only one guess per week.

This week's clue is this motto: "Houses like people sometimes vacate their premises. This one did."

Foster home search for Brooke

Brooke is a slim attractive 17 year-old black girl who is in need of a foster family by mid-June. She can be described as a typical teenager who is happy, carefree, and is very appealing. Brooke, a 10th grader, well-liked by both peers and adults, is interested in continuing her education in a vocational high school.

Currently, Brooke works after school in a nursing home and wishes to continue throughout the summer. She likes to roller skate, enjoys music and is a very talented artist using various mediums.

Brooks's family life has been very difficult having had her mother leave at a young age. Her step-father was left to raise seven children on his own. Brooke was unable to be cared for and nurtured in a manner that met her needs. Brooke remains in contact with her family and continues to have strong feelings for them.

Either a two parent family or a single adult female would be an appropriate foster family for Brooke. She will need a home for the next two years until she completes high school. Brooke loves children and would be quite comfortable in a home with younger children.

If you are interested in opening your home to Brooke, please call Priscilla Dillon at the Department of Social Services, 437 Cherry Street, West Newton, 965-2607. We provide training, support and a monthly stipend.

Congregation meeting

The Social Concerns Committee of Congregation Sha'aray Shalom, 1112 Main Street, Hingham, will present a program on Practical Issues Regarding the Elderly on Tuesday, May 22 at 8 p.m.

The MEADOWS is growing...

Beautifully

Phase II is well under way—thirty new homes arranged in six small clusters carefully placed amidst the wildflower-covered meadowlands. The attractive colonial farmhouse architecture, the spaciousness and flow of the interiors, and the serenity of the neighborhood add to the beauty of life in this superb Green Company community in Hingham.

So great is The Meadows appeal that Phase I is sold out, and more than half of this final group has been reserved.

If you are looking for extra luxury at an affordable price, we suggest a visit to The Meadows soon. You'll enter through fields strewn with wildflowers ... past the private clubhouse, swimming pool, whirlpool and tennis courts. You'll immediately be aware of the comfortable, relaxed lifestyle in this peaceful country setting.

The two and three bedroom homes have exceptional space: vaulted and cathedral ceilings; large country kitchens with sunny breakfast bays adjoining fireplaced family rooms; dining rooms with beamed ceilings and master suites that include sitting rooms with additional fireplaces.

Most of these fine condominium homes offer large private decks with extensive views across the meadows to the nearby woods. Walk-out basements have walls of glass and can easily be converted to additional living space.

The sales office and furnished models are open every day from 9 to 5. Prices range from about $170,000 to $250,000. Take exit 14 from Route 3 and follow Route 228 toward Hingham four miles. Turn right on Free Street, one mile to our entrance. Call 740-1500.

The MEADOWS — Developed, marketed and managed with pride by Green Hingham, Inc. A Green Company, company.

EVIE YOUNG

If June is the honeymoon month, Bermuda is the most popular honeymoon destination. Here young couples discover Old World charm in white-roofed, pastel homes, meandering country lanes, ocean coves and trim landscapes. The Bermudians are friendly; there is zero unemployment; the politics are generally stable and there is no hustle. For golfers Bermuda is paradise, boasting a number of top-ranked courses. Charter boats go out after game fish; sailboats can be rented, and shopping features fine British woolens, china and crystal. In short, Bermuda is as close to Utopia as the 20th Century has known. This is the reason that honeymooners return years later to find their paradise unchanged.

BOYS TRACK

The Cohasset Boys Track team lost a tough meet against Middleboro, 84-61.

Once again, the dynamic duo team of David Rice and John Rattenbury dominated the track. David Rice won the high jump and the 220, while placing second in the javelin and the 100. John Rattenbury won the high and low hurdles, while placing third in the high jump.

Also, Bobby Shultz won the mile; David Shultz won the two mile; Rich McCarthy won the discus and placed second in the shot put; Mike Basmajian won the triple jump; and John Reidy placed second in the 440.

Chris Kirkendall finished second in the 880; Willie Manns placed third in the high hurdles; Gary Parziale was third in the 220; Jim Lydon placed third in the shot put; and Perry Harris finished third in the long jump.

Against Rockland, the boys put up a valiant fight, but were overpowered 91-54.

David Rice won the 100, 220, and the high jump while placing third in the javelin; Perry Harris won the long jump, placed second in the triple jump and third in the low hurdles; Mike Basmajian won the triple jump and finished second in the long jump; and John Reidy won the 440.

Also, John Rattenbury placed second in the 220, and third in the 100, triple jump and high jump; Bob Shultz placed second in the mile; Mike Desantis finished second in the 880 and pole vault; Paul Sheppard was third in the discus; and Mark Murphy placed third in the 440.

GIRLS SOFTBALL

The Cohasset Girls Softball team defeated Middleboro, the top team in the league, in a 7-5 upset.

"The key to the game," remarked Coach Fallon, "was our excellent team defense."

Tara Stanford had three hits and two RBI's, while teammates Janet DiGirolamo and Carla Lucas each had a hit and one RBI.

Against another top notch team, Cohasset almost pulled out another victory but lost 6-5 to East Bridgewater.

"We played fairly well defense," commented Coach Fallon, "but we had an almost non-existent offense."

"For example," continued Fallon, "we left the tying and winning runs on the bases in the bottom of the seventh; and overall, we left a lot on base which cost us the win."

Against Hull, Cohasset was overpowered, 15-3.

"There were just too many mistakes defensively," remarked Coach Fallon, "to get us in the game."

Carla Lucas had three hits and two RBI's while Janet DiGirolamo contributed two more hits.

BOYS BASEBALL

The boys had a more successful week than last week. Although they lost two games, they beat the first place team, Middleboro, in a upset, 1-0.

Bobby Corkery pitched an outstanding game, giving up only four hits, and striking out seven batters.

The score was 0-0 until the seventh inning, when Chris Kuhn hit a single. Chris then stole second base, and was singled in by Bret Wetzell to score the winning run.

Cohasset played excellent defense and had no errors. Jay Contis also picked up a single in this game. Following the game, Coach Joe Bouchard said, "I am very proud of my team's performance."

Cohasset lost to East Bridgewater on Wednesday, 7-4. Philip Mahoney and Peter Corbett each had two hits.

Thursday, Cohasset was overpowered by a strong Hull team, 12-4. Jamie Roy and Chris Kuhn had two hits each.

by Joan Pinkham

Talk about your sentimental journey! Our trip to England was just that as our little contingent escorted my 88 year-old mother to a family reunion. A cousin from Calgary, Alberta shepherded mother's 87 year-old sister, while their "baby" brother of 83 joined us from Worthing. There were four generations, 41 relatives at the luncheon hosted by George and Marie and Frank and Phyll at the latter's golf club, Grim's-Dyke. One cousin had come from the Canary Islands, but, for us, it was only a short drive from our hotel near Regent's Park where spring flowers blossomed among the tree-lined walks. Primroses, lilacs, tulips, hibiscus, bluebells, pansies and azaleas were scattered throughout the dogwood and Lombardy poplars. When "on holiday" (the English term for "vacation"), dieting is cast to the wind when dessert menus include trolleys laden with mousse, creme caramel, pastries and half a dozen cheeses, including their delicious Stilton. Getting in the spirit of it all, I tried

What coffee is to most Americans, tea is to the English and so it was that one afternoon we gathered for high tea. Served buffet-style, the children circled the table first, piling their plates with dainty tea sandwiches, scones, layered cakes, strawberries with clotted cream and biscuits. They hardly put a dent in the pates, jams, marmalades and other delights on the pretty tea table. Later, when we drove to Whitby, a little fishing village on the North Sea, we would sample other English dishes such as trifle, fish and chips, kippers for breakfast and prawns as appetizers and cracklin's with our roast pork. Stopping for lunch at white-washed pubs while driving through the moors which were alive with lambs gamboling through the bracken, we sat by the fire and rediscovered the ploughman's lunch, a hefty meal of fresh bread, cheese, creamery butter, pickled onions and cold cuts. Farmers in the dales are a hardy lot, with ruddy complexions from being outdoors so much, or is it from the ales they enjoy in their local pubs? Here is a hearty dish we, too, can make:

COTTAGE PIE

1 lb. hamburg
1 large onion and two carrots
1 lb. potatoes
Flour and butter, salt and pepper
Beef cubes

Fry sliced onion, carrots until soft. Add meat, 1 T flour and seasonings. Add bouillon dissolved in 1 c. water and simmer for 20 to 30 min. Boil potatoes and mash, adding butter and milk to taste, seasoning with salt and pepper. Put meat in a casserole, cover with mashed potato. Dot with butter and bake at 375 for 30 min. before browning under broiler.

And what did we do besides eat and visit relatives? One day was spent in Harrods, the incredible department store which closes down one day each year so the Queen may shop in private. Their fourth floor food hall is a veritable Aladdin's cave of delights, with endless counters of fish, wurst, meats, cheeses - even little houses made of fudge and after whetting our appetites with only a glimpse of these wonders, we were ready for luncheon, an elegant meal with chefs serving both hot and cold buffets from silver bowls and urns filled with a bewildering variety of dishes enjoyed to the sounds of a piano being played in the background.

From the elegance of Berkeley Square to the neglected Covent Gardens, a double-decker bus tour of the city of London offers much to see, as Christopher Wren's magnificent St. Paul's Cathedral broods over smart shops and historic buildings. The next day in the soft dales of Yorkshire, below us shone the dome and columns of Howard Castle. driving through an "allee" of beech trees, we drew up in front of that great house so many of us viewed in the PBS television serial, "Brideshead Revisited." The Howards have lived there ever since Charles Howard, third earl of Carlisle and Acting Earl Marshal of England, had it built in 1700. When finished, 14 years later. it cost about $50,000. As lovely in reality as it appeared in the film, there it was, surrounded by the Great Lake, nestled beside the outlying Temple of the Four Winds and Mausoleum and, of course, the parks and formal gardens with the great fountain where Jeremy Irons as Charles Ryder and Diana Quick as Julia Flyte met for many scenes. The castle has always been open to visitors, but we only toured the grounds in an open jitney. The jonquils had gone by, but in many places the ground was covered with wild forget-me-nots, a blue carpet for the peacocks, pheasant and mallards that strolled throughout the palace gardens oblivious to admiring visitors. There's a restaurant in the part of the castle that is opened to the public and high on their tea menu, of course, are

SCONES

Sift together:
2 c. flour
2 tsp. "double-action" baking powder
? tsp. sugar
1/2 tsp. salt
Using a fork, work in 4 T butter
Into another bowl, break
2 eggs

Reserve a small amount of the egg white for topping. Beat the rest and add to the flour mixture with 1/2 c. cream or milk

Add a little more cream or milk if needed to make dough firm enough to handle but still soft. Turn out onto a floured board. Knead 1/2 min. Pat and roll into oblong 3/4" thick. Cut out circles, brush with reserved egg white diluted with 1 tsp. water. Sprinkle with sugar. Bake 15 min. at 450.

Partial eclipse 'threatens' sunlight

By Laurence B. Stein Jr.

On June 21, 528 A.D., Hank Morgan, a Connecticut Yankee, was saved from being burned at the stake at the hands of King Arthur's magician Merlin because he knew that a total eclipse of the sun was about to occur.

Hank threatened his captors with the extinction of the sun, and when they saw it happening, they released him and made him a hero of the realm. That is according to Mark Twain.

Now, on the morning of May 30, you too can threaten your enemies, or even your friends, in the same way. On that day there will be a partial eclipse of the sun right here on the South Shore, starting at 11:31 a.m. and ending at 2:31 p.m. Eastern Daylight Saving Time.

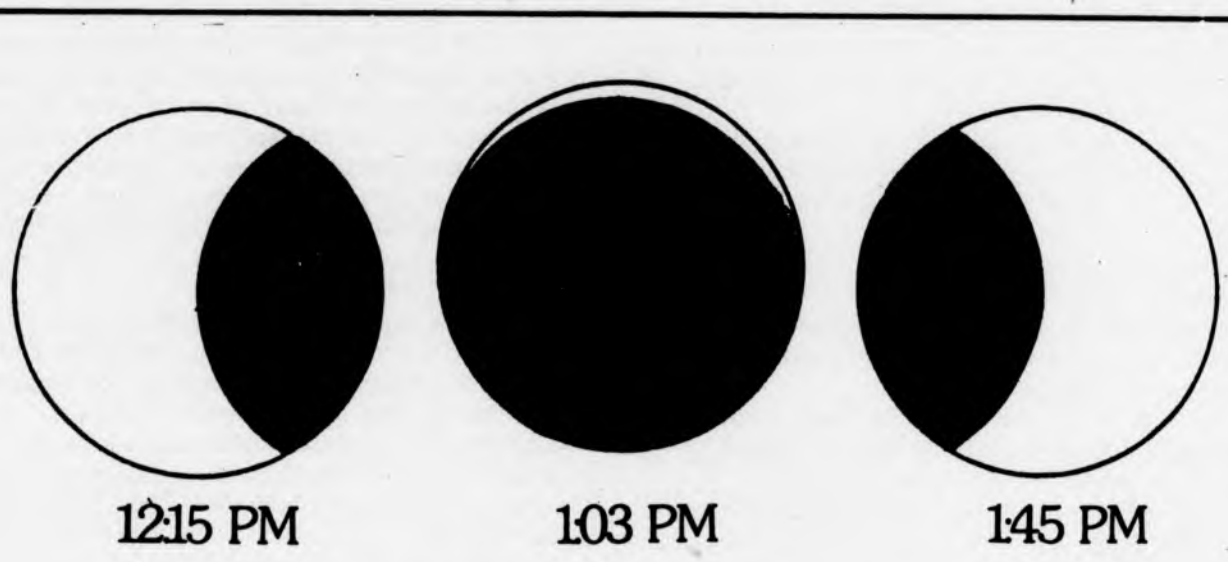
An eclipse of the sun occurs when the moon passes between the sun and the earth. The apparent size of each depends on how far it is from the earth at the moment. When the moon's disk appears to be equal to or larger than the sun's disk, the moon can completely cover the sun and we have a total eclipse. When the moon's disk is smaller than the sun's, we have an annular eclipse, during which a ring of sunlight may be seen all around the passing moon. The total and annular phases of an eclipse may only be seen over a rather narrow path on the earth's surface. Elsewhere the phenomenon is seen as a partial eclipse, with the moon seeming to take a bit out of the sun.

The May 30 eclipse is annular. The annular phase will be visible in the U.S. on a path which is only four to six miles wide. The eclipse starts about 700 miles northeast of the Marquesas in the Pacific Ocean at sunrise (noon here), travelling across Mexico near Guadalajara, then near New Orleans, Montgomery, Ala., Greensboro, N.C., out over the Atlantic on the Delmarva peninsula, finally ending at sunset (3:30 p.m. here) in the Sahara Desert. The entire event takes place in about three and a half hours.

If one were fortunate enough to be near Pocomoke City, Md., or Greensboro, he would have a four-second glimpse of the famous "diamond ring" effect. On the portion of the path east of about Greenville, N.C., it is predicted that the diamond ring may not be complete, but will have breaks in it caused by the mountains on the moon. Purists question whether that can really be called "annular."

Of particular interest to us here is the partial ecplise which will be visible in the 48 contiguous states. In our area at mid-eclipse (1:01 p.m.) the sun will be 90 percent obscured. It will be noticeably darker than usual at that time of day. On an otherwise calm day, there may be some faint, curious breezes generated by falling temperatures.

One may go about his normal business, but UNDER NO CIRCUMSTANCES should one look directly at the partially eclipsed sun without using a number 14 welder's glass or equivalent as a screen. The portion which will be visible, although smaller, is just as bright as the entire sun and can permanently damage the eyes. Ordinary photographic filters, over-exposed film, or smoked glass, all of which pass infrared rays, should NOT be used. Don't be afraid, though. Don't miss this great show. See it on your lunch break Wednesday, the 30th.



For those interested in observing the entire eclipse, here is the timetable:

At 11:31 a.m., start looking.

In a few minutes, a small dent shold appear on the right-hand (west) edge of the sun, just below center.

As time goes on, the dent will become a sizeable bite until, at 1:01 p.m., all that will remain of the sun is a thin sliver at the top (north).

From then on, the process will be reversed, until the last dent disappears on the left (east) side at 2:31 p.m.

Grandparent Adoption: a shared lifetime experience

By Theresa Sullivan

"It just leaves us with a good feeling every time we leave her place. And I know she enjoys us, especially our little boy. When she sees him, her whole face lights up."

This is what Carolyn Horgin, of Marshfield, said about her experience over the past month and a half with the Grandparent Adoption Program.

She and her husband Emmett and their son Ryan, 17 months, have enjoyed the visits they've had with Margaret, their 90 year-old adopted grandmother.

The Grandparent Adoption program provides children, adults and senior citizens the opportunity to share their lives with each other.

"There are two sets of volunteers who agree to spend an hour a week together," Program Coordinator Mary Fox said. The grandparent adoption program is part of Family Counseling and Guidance Center, Inc., 40 Independence Ave., Braintree.

"Older people say how hopeful it is to be in contact with positive young families. They comment on how much love and life they bring into their lives," Fox said.

But the grandparents are not the only beneficiaries. One teenager wrote a letter to the center when her adopted grandmother died. The letter explained that the teenager learned to see the older person's physical ailments as a sign of the experience and hard work, rather than handicaps.

"Taking time out for a meaningful relationship is really a worthwhile thing to do. Frequently both the family and the older people have other family, but they may not be accessible each week," Fox explained.

Emmet is from New York City and Carolyn is from New Jersey and neither has family around the South Shore. Margaret never had any children but she helped raise her younger siblings.

Sometimes Margaret visits the Horgin's at their home so she can enjoy the weather; Margaret lives in an apartment. Or the family takes her someplace with them, just so they spend time together.

Consistent contact is emphasized. "It's not meant to be a replacement of the family. It's a supportive relationship. We feel a meaningful relationship can be built in one hour a week."

Even if a family has contact with older relatives, that family could still enjoy the grandparent adoption program and need not feel ineligible, Fox said.

Carolyn said they felt comfortable with each other the first time they met and since then, "it's like I have known her for so long."

The grandparent adoption program is unique, for although some nursing homes organize visits from children, no other program joins entire families, Fox said.

Six years ago, the staff at the Family Counseling and Guidance Center "became aware that there were many families without contact with elderly people," Fox said. This is when the staff decided to establish it as a volunteer program.

Through both print and television coverage, and recruitment through churches and synagogues, families and elderly have been brought together.

When either a family or a senior citizen is interested, they fill out an application and are interviewed by a member of the staff. Each gives references, such as a clergyman or neighbor, Fox said.

The staff tries to match the families with the grandparents based on location and compatibility. This has worked out well for the Horgins and Margaret because she has shared some of Marshfield's history with the family.

If a grandparent specifies the age range of the children in the family, the staff tries to meet this request. Similarly, if a family prefers a grandmother over a grandfather, or the reverse, the staff makes the match requested.

Each month, a staff member meets with each grandparent individually. If he is unable to come to the office, the staff member goes to the person's home.

Families also discuss their relationship monthly at the Braintree office. The adopted families meet together with a staff member and share their experiences, their feelings and any questions or concerns, Fox said.

When a family and a grandparent express an interest in the program, they must make a commitment to meet one hour a week for a year. Once families are matched with grandparents, there is a trial period where both parties 'test the waters.' The relationship continues if all concerned are happy with the relationship.

After each year together, there is an evaluation of the relationship and both parties are asked if they want to remain in the relationship.

Most of the families and grandparents who have become involved have remained together, Fox said.

If one of the volunteers cannot make the weekly hour together, he is expected to notify the other person(s) and Fox said he is encouraged to send a card.

The staff at the center would much prefer the families and grandparents see each other every week for an hour rather than once a month for a whole day. That weekly commitment is essential.

Whether the adopted families spend holidays together is a personal choice. But every December and every June all the volunteers get together for a party. "It's really the highlight of the season," Fox said.

She stressed the focus of the adoption program has a "relational rather than a service emphasis." It is not designed to provide a babysitting service or a housecleaning service.

The grandparent adoption program's slogan sums it up: "Share an experience of a lifetime."

Please send one engineer from California, asap

By Lois Martin

OK, Brian, it's time for you to come home. Tell your boss your mother said so. If he ignores that, I'm getting in touch with his mother.

Maybe that's too brusque. I should say it differently.

Brian, Your Mother requests the Honor of Your Presence in her kitchen . . asap. RSVP. Do something, but get home.

Now I ask you. Have I been an interfering mother, someone who's always demanded a Sunday night at 9 p.m. telephone call, a person who keeps sending cookie samples with notes of advice on health tips, or ways to take no notice of pushy women?

PATCHES

Not on your life. And I'm overdue with my mother's rights for limited interference in her son's life. I want to know what the devil he does for work, what his room looks like and how his sailing lessons are going.

He moved to California in 1980 and I was a relatively good sport about it. I've certainly seen him since. The last time I saw him was Feb. 16, 1983. But who's counting.

We've had sporadic phone calls and a swap of written material. But now I want him to come home and I think I've got the right kind of approach.

Brian, you can have all the mashed potatoes. That ought to do it.

I got a wondrous Mother's Day card from him. Absence, you know, alters mental images. So in his mind, at least when he bought the card, I was apparently worthy of the finest pedestal. That's what happens when you haven't seen someone like a son or a mother for too long.

If he could come home now, I wouldn't say a word about his shirt hanging out. There'd be no mention of the refrigerator door being open. In fact, I could be persuaded to leave it ajar for a while if that would be more convenient for his appetite. And he wouldn't have to get a plate for his piece of cake. He could just walk around eating it like he likes to do and it would be the dog's job to take care of the fallage.

Besides, I'm certain he would welcome a little advice by now. The last time I spoke with him I gave him a quiz on his social life. He got some of the answers right.

When he was about 13 he looked 18. And I started a five year plan of lying to girls about his age, not mine, his. When girls kept calling him on the telephone, I'd tell them he was busy outside playing with his Tonka trucks or riding his little tricycle and he would return the call within five years. What's a mother for?

Left in the State of California on his own these four years, he's had to do without my motherly protection. He's had to fend for himself in choosing female companionship. I told him when he left "If she isn't wearing a bib apron and sensible shoes, forget her."

He considered that a sample of my wit rather than of my wisdom.

Now and then I've heard women's names mentioned in our conversation. But last time we talked, he said, "It's hard to find a reasonable woman." Now there's a teaser.

I wanted him to define "reasonable." I have the feeling that an apparent lack of reason in a woman has not prohibited his being pleasant in her company. But then, as I say, not being there, not getting any updates or anything, how would one know . . .

It was about two years ago that he mentioned in a long distance conversation that he'd told two Scandinavian girls he'd met that his mother loved company. When they got to Boston, he'd told them, they were to feel free to call and visit.

They certainly did, the next Sunday. In fact they coordinated their plans to be here at the time he arrived for a visit. I still have those pictures—one gorgeous blonde and one stunning brunette, flanking Brian, who wore a full moustache and a mammoth grin.

He seemed to consider both of them quite "reasonable."

When Brian graduated from high school, I had a glorified notion of writing a wee book called "By Brian." It was to be a delightful anthology of his life as a child. I had this warm vision of his showing it to his grandchildren some day, reading to them about all the cute things he'd done as a boy.

Having just cleaned out the attic, I realize that volume could have been larger and richer than I'd thought at the time.

And I still might write it. Certainly I'll include what he said that time he was really homesick and someone asked him if he'd found any great girls in California . . . He said, and this is forgivable , that there were a lot of interesting girls out there but he thought he probably would end up marrying someone like his mother.

Now that's not reasonable. But it's heartwarming and it's time for him to come home at least for a double batch of lasagna.

Angler's corner

By George Doucette

Bucketmouth, Hawg, Cow, Lunker, Iron Jaw, etc... could these names be fish?

This is terminology used to describe the most popular fresh water gamefish in the U.S., and Plymouth County holds some of the best largemouth bass fishing in the state.

Hundreds of shallow lakes full of natural structure have spawned great bass holes over the last 20 years. Structure such as stumps, grass, lily pads, fallen trees, old boat docks are breeding grounds for these ferocious fighters. This is the time of year (May, June) when bass are most vulnerable. Females, averaging 4 to 8 lbs., are in the spawning stages of the year and are highly protective of the area of the pond they roam. They venture into shallow areas of the pond — 3 to 5 feet in depth — to spawn near the above mentioned types of structure.

Large sandy circles in open water will indicate to you that you're in the right nesting area. The key to hooking bass in the spawn stage is to aggravate them into striking as they are reluctant to feed. Repeatedly cast your lure or bate to the area of the nest and watch for a quick hit. The bass will strike at the intruder to get it out of its area. Change your lures and your retrieve.

Rubber worms, minnow type swimming lures, rubber frogs, shiners, all pose a threat to the bass and her eggs in the nest. Some of the 8 to 10 lb. bass that are on the nest are at their most vulnerable time and your best chance to catch that record of a lifetime is now. So get out and get fishing.

Remember, conservation is the key to good fishing over the years. Keep only what you will eat or that one record bass you've been dreaming about.

(George Doucette is from Adams Sport & Tackle, Route 139, Pembroke, telephone 826-8341. The shop has a competent staff of bass fishermen to help you with your selection of lures, equipment, bat.)

An economist from the Boston Federal Home Loan Bank Board told us that he thinks rates will top out at 14½% and then drift back down to 13½% before the elections in November. The news media is full of doom and gloom as economists seem to be unable to agree on the future. Meanwhile, the business of buying and selling real estate goes on.*

Litchfields push forward with lawsuit vs. town

By Jane Lane

Litchfield Express Co. Inc. will not remove their trucks from Lot 25 Bayberry Lane, as ordered last week by the Board of Selectmen.

Instead, they will proceed with a civil court suit filed in Norfolk Superior Court against selectmen. The complaint seeks to have the court annul the board's decision.

For the second time this year, the board ordered the Salvadors to remove the seven company trucks from town property on Bayberry Lane. According to their decision last week, the owner has 60 days to vacate the premises used to park the vehicles.

But according to Izzie Salavador, after offers to buy the property from the town were denied and the order was issued, the next step is litigation. Speaking for her husband, who is currently bedridden and under a physician's care for a heart condition, Mrs. Salvador says they "will fight this to the bitter end."

The history of this confrontation goes back to 1969 when the the Salvadors moved the business from 81 Pleasant Street to 30 Bayberry Lane. Under an agreement with the board of selectmen, who determined the adjacent land was unbuildable, the Salvadors were allowed to use lot 25 as a parking area for the Litchfield Express trucks.

In 1974, Barron heard indirectly of complaints about the use of the town-owned property by the private company, and decided to settle it with the selectmen at that time. That board included Henry Ainslie, Arthur Clark and Mary Jeanette Murray.

According to the suit filed by the Salvador's attorney, Joseph D'Agostino, that board reiterated the previous approval.

The issue arose again this past fall when former Zoning Inspector Robert Dennis cited the Salavdors for violation of town bylaws. And on Feb. 15, 1984, the board of selectmen voted to revoke any previous right to the town-owned property and ordered all trucks to be vacated from the premises within 90 days.

The Salvadors were told they could apply for a variance from the Zoning Board of Appeals, but were advised by counsel that they would be unable, since they did not own the land. When the Salvadors threatened a lawsuit unless a compromise could be reached, the board suspended the 90-day eviction order. During that time, attorney D'Agostino met with Town Counsel Richard Henderson and, according to Mrs. Salvador, the company offered to buy the entire town-owned lot; purchase just the 50 feet of the land used for parking, or arrange a long term lease.

The board discussed those options at the February 15 meeting, and according to Mrs. Salvador, decided in an executive session to order the eviction within 90 days.

The Salvadors were in Florida at the time of this meeting, but obtained a tape recording of the meeting. They filed civil charges against the town at that time.

Mrs. Salvador said she was told the board would initiate another discussion to resolve the issue out of court. "I thought we would be vindicated. That is the impression we got from the selectmen," she said.

The Salvadors and their attorney attended a meeting of the board, but nothing was decided. Town Counsel Henderson, cramped for time before town meeting, said he would have to research further, with a decision due around the first of May.

Mrs. Salvador said they were told by Executive Secretary Mark Lanza last Tuesday that a decision would be made the next night, but their attendance was not required. The Salvadors, and their attorney were not present at the meeting.

Neighbor John Rhodes did attend the meeting and made several allegations to selectmen, including a complaint that the Litchfield Express trucks start up at 4 a.m.

"We couldn't get our employees here at 4 a.m.," Mrs. Salvador contends. "The earliest we ever have a truck leave is 6:30 or 7 a.m."

During this entire process, Mrs. Salvador says they have never personally received a complaint from any neighbor, including Rhodes.

She vows that they will "fight until we don't have a penny left. Barron has been completely devastated by this. I really don't know if he can handle this. I don't know what we'll do if he can't cope with this."

Mammoth list awaits boaters seeking mooring sites

By Jeff Giles

Cohasset is a small town with a small harbor. For Harbormaster Harry Ritter, this makes the growing demand for moorings a little more frustrating every year.

In 1983, less than 20 mooring sites opened up, while again as many applications were accepted by the Harbor Department. This trend has been disturbing the town for at least a decade.

The result is a mammoth waiting list — a list which Ritter estimates could keep a boat out of Cohasset waters for as long as seven years. Sometime this summer, a certain 20-foot boat will finally win a spot in the harbor; it has been climbing the list for 10 years.

Despite the fact that space limitations persist, hopes for expansion of the harbor have been abandoned indefinitely. In 1968, seven and one-half acres of the creek were dredged, and 30 new mooring locations were made available to the harbormaster. Not an inch has been added since. This inertia is the result of both pessimism and practicality.

Ritter feels certain that even 25 new acres of harbor and 100 new boats would not ease the demand. Within two years, he predicts, the waiting would return. More importantly, however, he is confronted with the simple fact that these hypothetical 25 acres of land are just that — hypothetical. They do not exist. The harbor needs to expand and has nowhere to expand to.

According to Harry Ritter, the Federal Wetlands Act, which he calls a "con job" of legislation, made conservation sites out of much of the area's land suitable for dredging. Putting that land back into the Advisors plan to reduce warrant

The Advisory Board hopes to substantially reduce the number of articles on the special town meeting warrant for fear there won't be a quorum to vote on the most important items.

Tuesday night, the board agreed it must cut the number of warrant articles if it's going to draw a quorum at the June 18 special town meeting.

The board will meet with selectmen Tuesday, June 5 to review the 48 articles. After hearing the selectmen's arguments, the board will eliminate items it finds inappropriate for a special town meeting.

"Our biggest problem is the sewer problem," Jim Lagrotteria, advisory board chairman said. "This is a special town meeting called for one purpose. Let's not lose sight of that."

Selectman Frank England attended the Advisory Board's meeting. He said, "If we limit it to 15, we're going to have to have another special (town meeting) for the rest of the articles."

Lagrotteria replied, "Sure as shootin' we're going to have another special. Do you think the firefighters are going to work without a contract for a year?"

Twenty eight of the 48 articles are carried over from

Mill Bridge update

Although negotiations are continuing with the state, there is an article within the special town meeting warrant, requesting funds to reconstruct the railings on Mill River Bridge.

Nevermind the wire mesh fencing proposed a couple of months ago to prohibit divers from jumping from the scenic bridge. According to Executive Secretary Mark Lanza, there was enough dissension from the community to discard that proposal.

What the town is proposing to the state now is that funding be made available for the reconstruction of the ornamental railings.

If the town does not successfully persuade the state to fund the reconstruction, there is a warrant article requesting $15,000 to design the reconstruction of the railings and underside of the bridge. There is also a request for $40,000 to construct and replace the railings.

No wire fencing originally included in the state proposal, will be part of this revised package, Lanza said.

The Cunningham Bridge, which he said is not in as bad shape as the Mill River Bridge, would likely be approved under state Bridge Improvement funds. That proposal, which would come after the Mill River repairs, would only include repair of the bridge approaches.

Sanctuary Pond impact

In response to a request from the Board of Health, the Drainage Advisory Committee has verbally advised the board that there would be no cumulative adverse effect on Sanctuary Pond from several proposed building proposals in that area.

The Board of Health requested the committee review the cumulative effect that several proposed projects would have on the town water supply. Although the committee had previously suggested each separate proposal would have no significant effect, the board thought a cumulative effect should be reviewed.

Drainage committee member Diane Sullivan said the review was completed and the members forwarded their response verbally to the health board members.

Although the committee made several recommendations on ways in which Sanctuary Pond should be repaired, they decided there would not be an adverse effect on the water supply, caused by the proposed Cohasset Heights Plaza, the Cohasset Plaza, the Alco Oil project off King Street and the office building being constructed by John Seavey on Route 3A.

Cohasset bloodmobile

The Cohasset Red Cross will held a bloodmobile Monday, June 18, to honor the memory of Kay Gibbons, a past chairman and a loyal supporter of the bloodmobile.

It will be held at the Unitarian Parish House on the Common, and the hours will be 2:30 to 7:30 p.m.

Everyone in good health between the ages of 17 and 66 is urged to attend. Blood is life — pass it on!

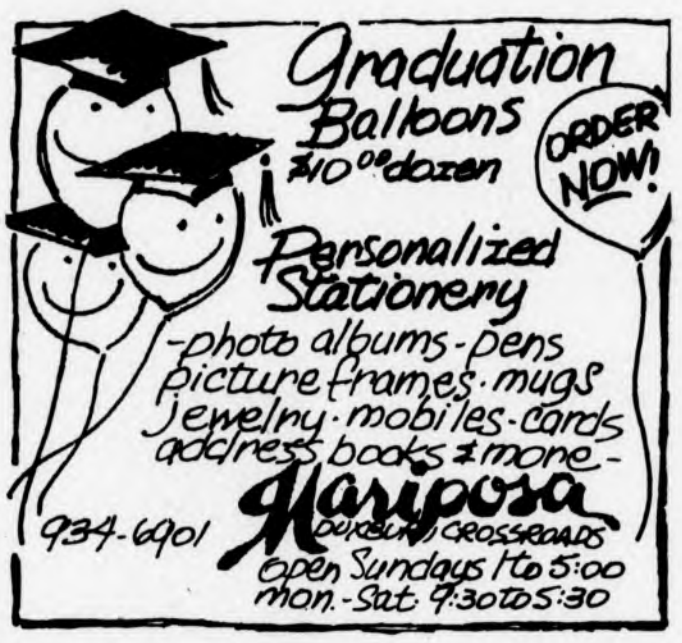
Utility sticker information

The Board of Health wished to remind townspeople that new utility (landfill) stickers must be affixed to the rear window of each car in order to gain entrance to the landfill. The stickers will be on sale at the Recreation Department (Town Hall) beginning June 4. From July 1, individuals who do not have a sticker will be prohibited from using the landfill.

The life of the landfill is limited and every effort must be made to maximize the time. One way of accomplishing this is strick enforcement of resident use only. This is why the stickers are very important.

Sunday's graduation

The 1984 class of Cohasset High School will graduate this Sunday at 3 p.m. under the tents of the South Shore Music Circus.



The commencement speakers will be class Valedictorian Diane Mullen and class Salutatorian Susannah Barrett.

Class night is scheduled at the high school tonight, following a week of activities, including Tuesday evenings' senior class prom.

MAPC meeting

A public meeting to examine options for restoring bus and commuter rail services in the South Shore will be held Thursday, June 7, at 7:30 p.m. in the Selectmen's Chambers in Braintree Town Hall. The meeting is sponsored by the Metropolitan Area Planning Council.

The proposed commuter rail service will run along existing rights-of-way through Scituate, Cohasset, Hingham, Weymouth, Holbrook, Braintree and Quincy.

hands of the harbor, he believes, would take a miracle of politics in Washington. The marshlands protected by the Act are now laying dormant and have slowly begun to erode, he says.

Ritter predicts the harbor will look no different in a hundred years.

In the meantime, a crowded and indignant waiting list is not the only concern of the Harbor Department. Although safety standards require six feet of water in the harbor, Ritter estimates that some areas are as shallow as four-and-a-half to five. The Army Corps of Engineers which is responsible for the dredging has Ritter on its waiting list.

Because the harbor is funded from both state and federal levels, it is prevented from giving mooring preference to town residents. Still, Harbormaster Ritter claims that somewhere between 80 and 85 percent of the boat owners live in Cohasset. As a result, many of the 200 waitlisted, included the 45 or 50 who already own boats, look to neighboring harbors as an alternative. Scituate, of course, is a prime target.

Rookie Scituate Harbormaster R.I. Francis, however, has found just as few answers as Cohasset's Harry Ritter. Plagued by over-crowding, Francis has imposed an indefinite moratorium on new moorings. No new boat will go into Scituate Harbor this summer, and, hopefully, a few old ones will come out.

Although the town's 1,300 mooring sites dwarf Cohasset's small harbor, the space problem is no less acute. The Scituate waiting list stands at about 300 now and continues to grow. Francis estimates that it can generally take anywhere from two to three years to climb.

In his attempt to thin out the harbor, Francis reveals his own personal desire to improve the system rather than just expand it. When he insists that "happy boating" is his most pressing concern, he means it.

Although the $17,000 which Cohasset Harbor draws each year goes directly into the General Fund, the mooring revenues in Scituate provide for a 24-hour, three-boat patrol which acts as one safeguard against the over-crowding. Still, Francis makes no promises to boatowners: "You pay your money. You take your chances — we've got no guarantee."

In practical terms, Harbormaster Francs is confronted with many of the same problems which confront Ritter. Although he feels that dredging is needed in many parts of the harbor, he estimates that it would cost the town more than $50,000. He, too, feels the pressure of the waiting list, yet he is firmly dedicated to keeping the pressure both safe and manageable.

"The saddest thing is when someone comes to me and says, 'Look, this is my boat. Where can I put it?' I sympathize with his personal problem, but I've got to look at the harbor and say, 'Where do I put these boats?' The same problem, 1,300 fold," he answers.

No new moorings are going to be found in either Scituate or Cohasset — not for a long time. The waiting lists will continue to grow. As Francis says, "I've asked myself all these questions. I wish I was Solomon. I wish I had all the answers."

For the time being, there are no answers — both Robert Francis and Harry Ritter know that. Now it's their turn to wait.

(This article was researched and written by Jeff Giles, a sophomore at Brown University and a 1983 graduate of Cohasset High School. Ed.)

the annual town meeting warrant. The second session of the annual town meeting was postponed because there was no quorum (200 registered voters).

The controversial sewer article requests application for federal and state grant funds, and the appropriation of the town's share for an Innovative and Alternative Project based on Ward Engineering's study and recommendations. The town's share, according to the sewer commission, is estimated at $1.1 million.

The board is expected to indefinitely postpone an undetermined number of special town meeting articles after discussing the items with selectmen.

Last week's Mystery House had no correct answers

With absolutely two weeks remaining, the race is coming to a fast halt. But no one guessed the right answer last week.

The correct answer is 134 South Main Street and not the guesses of 49, 83, 87 Elm Street or 22 Spring Street.

This house, built around 1848-50, originally was located at 48 South Main Street, Cohasset Center.

Its location was approximately where today's Pilgrim Cooperative Bank and Curtis Compact store are located.

The house was subsequently remodelled and moved to its present location of 134 South Main Street.

It's builder and first owner was Martin Nichols Bates, son of Colonel Newcomb Bates whose older house is now called the "Dr. Bridgham House" (Cards n' Shards) has been seen in this contest and is directly across the street.

Martin Nichols Bates was born in 1812, married in 1848 to Lydia N. Cousens, daughter of Capt. George Cousens, whose South Main Street house also has been seen in the contest.

Martin Nichols Bates was a "housewright" and died in 1876. His son, Henry Thomas Pratt Bates married Mary F. Bridgham, "the girl next door" (across the street) in 1894.

In 1915 William McGaw, owner of the hardware store next door purchased the house and in 1922 moved it to its current location at 134 South Main St. It is now the home of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Price.

Its exact location is across the street from St. Anthony's Rectory, South Main Street, adjacent on the south to the vacant lot where the original St. Anthony's Church stood.

After ten weeks, we have some tight races with contestants fighting for all three places.

Still in contention for first place after ten weeks of play are Robert Leonard Sr. and Warren Pratt with eight correct answers.

Orthopedic physical therapy office opens

A Scituate native and a college classmate have combined their talents in a new medical concept. They recently opened an orthopedic physical therapy office, where they are specializing in the treatment of orthopedic and sports injuries.

The office complex of Magill and Gardner is located in the Cohasset Professional Center, Suite 28, on Chief Justice Cushing Highway. William L. Magill, a 1975 Scituate High School graduate, and college classmate Kevin K. Gardner of New York, are partners in this new business venture.

The pair opened the practice the first of May, and are already receiving their first patients. With the arrival of warm weather and increased outdoor activity, they expect to see a greater number of people seeking relief from their sports injuries.

Magill and Gardner is the first private physical theraphy office in this area, featuring the most modern equipment to deal with orthopedic and sports injuries.

Both licensed registered physical therapists, Magill and Gardner decided to begin this sophisticated practice in a setting outside the hospital environment, hoping to achieve a more comfortable, relaxing atmosphere for their patients.

Although both young men have practiced physical therapy in hospitals, they decided this area needed a quality physical therapy facility without requiring the patient to visit a hospital.

A major portion of their practice will focus on the treatment of sports-related injuries. Torn ligaments, bursitis, tennis elbow and back injuries are just some of the aches and pains Magill and Gardner are equipped to handle.

As a former athlete at Scituate High School where he played football and track, and later as a hockey player for New York University, Magill realized that without proper physical therapy, an athlete runs a strong risk of re-injury. Although an athlete may be extremely motivated for quick recovery, he often lacks the proper supervision during physical therapy. A sports injury may often become a disability in later years if not treated properly, Magill said.

New York native Gardner agrees. With his participation in swimming, basketball and cycling, they are knowledgeable and experienced in just about all forms of athletics and all types of possible injuries.

One visit to their second floor office suite will assure any prospective patients that this new practice will deliver what it promises.

It's the chemistry that produces this great act

By Theresa Sullivan

It's chemistry.

That's the ingredient that exists between Cohasset High School seniors Nancy Walls and Kurt Hochkeppel, both on and off stage.

Nancy and Kurt acted in the 'Chinamen' together, a British farce by Michael Frayn. The school's production of the two-man play brought the cast and crew to the third level of state competition in Boston this winter. They were among the top 12 of 63 schools.

Although Kurt said the most difficult part of the play was kissing Nancy (very briefly), it's obvious the two "clicked" on stage.

In the play, Nancy plays three characters: a housewife, a drunk woman who has recently left her husband for a rock star and the rock star. Kurt plays the housewife's husband and the drunken, estranged husband of the drunken wife.

Here are Kurt and Nancy talking about their performances:

"The way we did the play, the lines were totally changed," Nancy said. "We'd drop things (lines) and have to ad-lib."

"Some lines were tough to say," Kurt said.

"You kept the same gist," said Nancy.

"Anything I did wrong as Barney (the drunk man), I just blamed it on being drunk," Kurt said.

Nancy said, "Doing the boy was the most difficult. It was hard to keep my voice low. It took awhile to get it down." She said Kurt had a challenging part because he had a lot of monologues while she was in the wings off stage changing her costume.

Kurt and Nancy were asked what other extracurricular interests they had.

"I should probably go first because it will take her 25 minutes," Kurt said with a sideways look at Nancy.

"I play golf, if they let me. I couldn't say I'm on the team. I mow lawns." He was on the yearbook staff, senior class secretary, and directed the winning play in the school drama competition.

"National Honor Society," Nancy piped in on behalf of Kurt. When it was her turn, she said, "I directed the losing play in the school (drama) competition—Kurt was the star of the play."

She made sure to announce her most significant accomplishment, playing on the Powder Puff football team. In the next breath Nancy added that Kurt made his debut as a cheerleader at the game.

Nancy was the captain of the field hockey team, a member of the gymnastics team and is captain of the girls' tennis team. Both Kurt and Nancy are honor roll students.

Drama Workshop Advisor Ron Emmons said he chooses a play for competition based on the talent in the school on a given year. He said he chose 'Chinamen' "to showcase the talent of Kurt and Nancy."

Emmons sounded more like the proud father bragging about his children than an advisor. He said of Nancy, "This is her third drama festival and her second state final. She was in a very minor role the last time. She had virtually no lines.

She had to just sit there and react.

Barry Nolan of Evening Magazine was a judge at this festival. Nolan said of Nancy, "She conveys volumes with a look."

Kurt's indoctrination into theatre required great strength and fortitude—he was backstage holding up a wall.

"He has a tremendous amount of variety. He was at his best when he could try more varied characters. He tends to bring out better performances in other people.

The great dramatists of CHS — Nancy Walls and Kurt Hochkeppel, who depart this week at graduation ceremonies Sunday.

"He has an excellent sense of comic timing," Emmons said.

But Emmons was quick to add that the production manager Janet Carlson and stage manager Sarah Muir were vital to the execution of the production.

"One of them saved us in Boston by running out to get thread to sew the seat of Kurt's pants together," he said.

For the 'Chinamen,' the crew had five minutes to construct the set. "It's a real challenge; that has to be as orchestrated as anything that's done on stage, and is as important.

"I always feel that they're as much a part of the production as the kids on the stage. This is the first year I haven't had to go in and check on the people."

The 'Chinamen' required responsibility and alertness. Once the set was constructed, Kurt and Nancy had costume changes and there were a number of quick prop changes, Emmons said.

"As soon as you came around stage on one side, you had to run around stage on the other side," Emmons said.

Although Cohasset did not win the state drama festival, the audience reaction to 'Chinamen' was more favorable than for any other play at the festival, he said. Four minutes were added to the play's time because of applause.

"As far as the audience is concerned, we should have won. 'Chinamen' received the only standing ovation at the festival," he said. "I received two letters from people we competed with, saying how sorry they were that we had not won because they felt we deserved it. (And they said they were sorry) that Kurt was not named to allstate cast as well as Nancy."

Although Nancy and Kurt are graduating, they may continue to perform under the direction of Emmons because he also puts on summer theatre, often with graduates and high school students combined.

Nancy plans to attend Boston College School of Management in the fall and Kurt is on the waiting list at Dartmouth, his first choice. He also has been accepted to Boston College.

Both said they'll probably try out for college theatre, but Nancy said she expects the competition to be tight.

Najjar bestowed emeritus status

Dr. Victor A. Najjar of Cohasset was one of five professors at Tufts University's Boston campus to receive emeritus status on his retirement this year as a member of the faculty. He has served at Tufts School of Medicine since 1968 as the school's first American Cancer Society (Massachusetts Division) professor of molecular biology; as chief of the division of protein chemistry in the department of molecular biology and microbiology, and as a professor of pediatrics. Emeritus status was conferred at the University's recent commencement exercises in Medford.

An international authority of the biochemical interactions of cancer cells, Dr. Najjar has done extensive research on tuftsin, a blood-borne molecule which helps people fight off severe infections., Tuftsin is so-named because it was discovered at Tufts, in 1969, by Dr. Najjar and his associates. The presence of this molecule stimultes the body's white blood cells to withstand invading microbes; those who lack tuftsin are suspectible to severe infections.

Dr. Najjar was born in Lebanon and attended the American University of Beirut, where he received his Doctor of Medicine degreee in 1935. After further training in Lebanese and Turkish hospitals, he came to the United States and joined the faculty of Johns Hopkins Medical School in 1944. By 1957 he was already the author or co-author of 67 scientific papers and had attained the rank of associate professor of medicine.

For the next 11 years, before coming to Tufts, he was professor and chairman of the Department of Microbiology at Vanderbilt University in Nashville, Tennessee. Through the years he has been active in service for voluntary and government agencies, in many instances working directly with the U.S. Public Health Service.

Colour photography show

"Seeing the image you might not have seen, the unexpected, the beautiful; I seized the moment, snapped the shutter, so we might enjoy it later, together."

The colour photography of Julie M. White will be featured at the Scituate Arts Association Gallery from June 3 to June 30. On display will be many of her people photos, portraits, landscapes, and seascapes of the South Shore, France, and England.

Julie discovered photography as an art form five years ago when her husband gave her a 35 milimeter camera. Basically self-taught, she studied art composition and technique through library books and she has studied with Charles Lindgren, Peter Anderson, Stephen Trefonides, and Linda Wasko. In business for three years, Julie has sold hundreds of landscapes and seascapes.

Recently, a major company purchased 62 photographs to decorate their offices. Julie is also a wedding and portrait specialist, and many of her photographs have been chosen for awards in juried shows throughout the area.

"Remember," Julie says, "art is for looking into, not just looking at." She feels her show will make you smile.

Opening reception will be held at the Gallery, 134 Front St., Scituate Harbor, Sunday, June 3 from noon to 5 p.m. and will be viewed through June 30. Regular Gallery hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday, Sundays noon to 5 p.m., closed Mondays, phone 545-6150. The public is invited to attend the opening and refreshments will be served.

Blood pressure screening

The Medi Mart Drug Store located at 739 Cushing Highway, Cushing Plaza, will hold a free blood pressure screening clinic for the public, Saturday, June 2, from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m.

The screening will be conducted by a nurse. Anyone with an elevated reading will be advised to see a physician.

The clinic is one of a series of health screenings held regularly by the Medi Mart Drug Stores.

CLOSED SUNDAY, JUNE 3rd FOR GRADUATION!

around town

☐Garrett Winn of S. Main Street, received an associate degree in Computer Engineering Technology during commencement exercises at Wentworth Institute of Technology this past weekend.

☐Airman Thomas R. Young, son of Carole N. and Joseph Tierney of 36 Stockbridge Street, has been assigned to Chanute Air Force Base, Illinois, after completing basic Air Force training. Thomas spent the six weeks prior to this at Lackland Air Force Base in Texas, where he studied the Air Force Mission organization and customs and received special training in human relations. He will now receive specialized instruction in vehicle maintenance. Thomas is a 1982 CHS graduate.

☐Happy Birthday, Ann Pompeo.

☐Graduation festivities started with a bang last weekend with Randy Salvador's folks holding a Portuguese Festival in his honor. It was a grand time, and it is still the topic of conversation — the food was outstanding, the entertainment nifty, the tent looked great (and was used, as there were some showers), and guests had great fun. Congratulations to Randy.

☐The Senior Hockey players received their rings from the Hockey Boosters Club this weekend, and they are a handsome sight indeed. Ask one of the boys to show it to you (if you have to!). They are special.

☐Anyone who has seen our Police Chief, Joe Kealey, lately might be wondering about the huge grin he is sporting. Actually, there are two reasons! Joe turned 50 this week, (and when you are a half-century old you do smile), and his daughter, Susan, told him of her unusual honor that she received at Holy Cross. Susan was elected captain of both the lacrosse team and the field hockey team for next season — an honor indeed. That's not only the sign of a superior athlete, it also signifies a super gal with the right feelings for the game, others, etc. Congratulations are in order for both Joe and Susan.

☐Had an update on John Buckley, son of Jack and Bobbie Buckley. John has been promoted to area manager of North and West Texas. He is with the Spirits Division of Hublein. John has bought a home in Fort Worth, so he must be planning to remain a Texan for a spell! John was a 1974 CHS grad, and captain of the football team.

☐Heidi Hublitz, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Uve F. Hublitz, is scheduled to graduate June 9 from Thayer Academy in Braintree.

☐ John Giuggio, president of the Boston Globe, director of the Globe Santa Fund, and an active participant in many commuinity organizations, will receive an honorary degree during Emmanuel College Commencement ceremonies.

John, is president and chief operating officer of the Boston Globe and Affiliated Publications, Inc. He began his career at the Boston Globe as a messenger, joining the advertising department full time after his graduation from college. He ascended through the company, serving as classified advertising manager, business manager, vice president and treasurer, and then executive vice president before assuming his current position. A graduate of Boston College, John is president of the Boston College Alumni Association and University Club of Boston. He is also chairman of the Board of Trustees of Boston College High School, Vice Chairman of the Better Business Bureau and a Trustee of Carney Hospital of Dorchester, Mass.

☐Janet Jordan recently graduated from Laboure Junior College in Boston. She received an associate's degree in Respiratory Therapy. Therese Ann Rossignol also graduated with an associates degree in nursing. She is now a registered nurse.

☐Mrs. Judy A. Rauhauser of Cohasset has completed the Options Program at the Katharine Gibbs School of Boston. Options is a 13-week program stressing up-to-date skills and business basics designed to prepare adult women to enter or reenter the business world.

☐Susan McArthur will receive a Bachelor of Science degree in Medical Sonography, and Lynne O'Hearn will receive a bachelor of Science degree in Physical Therapy from Quinnipiac College in Hamden, Conn., June 3.

☐Marine Pfc. John J. MacLean, son of Geraldine T. MacLean of 30 Schofield Road, recently participated in "Combined Arms Exercise 7-84" in the California desert. He is a member of 2nd Marine Division Camp Lejuene, N.C., conducted at the Marine Corps Ground Combat Center, Twenty-nine Palms, Calif. The exercise was designed to provide realistic combat training and coordination between Marine Corps air and ground units.

The lines form around the ticket booth as anxious patrons seek seats for summer events at the South Shore Music Circus.

☐News on another Buckley brother, Barry. Barry graduated from CHS in 1979 (was also football captain) and has received his degree from the University of Maine at Orono.

☐ May 11 was certainly a special day for Russell B. and Kathryn (Kraft) Henderson of 44 Beechwood Street, as they received their daughter into the world. Anyone who happened to remember dates remembers that the Kinchlas called about the birth of their son on that same day! Even the same hospital. Chances are they could be seen with their newborns going for long walks on these gorgeous spring days.

☐Nancy Ann Laue, a senior at Boston College School of Nursing, was recently accepted into Sigma Theta Tau, the National Honor Society for Nurses and Alpha Sigma Nu, the National Jesuit Honor Society. Nancy is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Quentin F. Laue of Linden Drive and a 1980 CHS graduate.

☐Professor Frederick C. Gamst has been elected president of the Society for the Anthropological Study of Work. The society draws on the international membership of anthropologists from all fields of discipline, sociologists, labor studies, specialists and others concerned with the comparative historical and cultural study of human work.

☐Thomas S. Ryan, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas D. Ryan of 17 Hillside Drive, has attained status as a Dean's List student for the first semester of 1983-84 at the University of Mass. at Amherst. A pre-med student, the average maintained must be a 3.5 grade point. Tom was recently inducted into the National Honor Society of Alpha Lambda Delta.

☐The neighborhood won't be the same when Fred Pipenbrink "hangs up his mailsack." Fred has been with the Post Office for 40 years, and has been our mailman forever! No matter how the weather is, or Fred is, the ever-present smile of his is enough to make anyone's day a pleasant one. It doesn't seem possible that he is going to retire. More news as it comes in...

☐During this busy week, be sure to take time to report your news, so it may be everyone's news!

A grand time

Everyone remembers their high school graduation. Even more than college commencement, it evokes sweet memories of our longtime friendships, trusted teachers, and a heartwrenching departure from our protected world of adolescence.

No one really wanted to think of what would be confronting them in the "real world" ahead, be it another session of academia or employment. High school graduation was a joyful occasion, a time to share with acquaintances that through the years blossomed into warm friendships.

Cohasset High School has a tradition of producing a beautiful graduation ceremony. Under the expanse of the Music Circus tent, it is an intimate occasion among friends, neighbors and proud relatives.

And proud we should all be of our graduates, whether they are traveling next fall to ivy towers or an office. They made the journey in their own way, decided for themselves the path they would follow in their future.

This is no easy judgement for an 18 year-old to determine. With help and guidance from parents, teachers, and friends, they must decide, as we all must, what direction their lives will take.

But it is the individual who ultimately decides his own ate. A mammoth decision to rest upon such inexperienced shoulders. It is but a beginning step in a long road of decisions and solutions to be resolved by this young adult.

Growing up is a complexity in itself. But the companionships we offer ourselves in high school help us cope in later years. Those four years of development lend so much to our budding wisdom of the future.

To all our children who will be stepping from their past this Sunday, we offer our congratulations. May your past four years not be forgotten; it is a solid ground from which you will experience the future.

Good luck.

NEWS ITEM — Cohasset High seniors dedicate their '84 yearbook Tessahoc to the town's police department. 'We hope they didn't take it as a joke, we're serious about it,' said a senior. 'Someone proposed the dedication to the police and there was a lot of support for it.' 'We're really surprised and pleased,' said one Cohasset police officer.

"...Did you hear the news...when the kids saw the dedication they decided they want to become cops...!"

Commuting Olympic-style

By Claire McDonough

"How do you get something made an Olympic event?" I asked the Dragon.

As usual, he was a font of information. "Beats me," he replied. "Why?"

"Because," I told him, "I want to start a new category. Olympic Rush Hour Driving."

"The idea has possibilities," he admitted. "How would it work?"

"I've given it a great deal of thought," I told him.

"In order to qualify, you would have to drive from a suburban town to Boston every Monday through Friday for at least a year. You would arrive in Boston before 9 a.m. and exit after 5 p.m., and you'd get extra points for every block you drove in Boston itself.

"Bus and taxi drivers would clearly have no amateur standing, but people who drive without getting paid could pick up extra points for every passenger in the vehicle."

"How come?" he asked.

"Because it takes greater skill to drive with people in the car. Have you ever tried to maneuver between a pushcart and a bus with someone at your right describing a Paul Szepp cartoon, someone directly behind you casually observing that her baby is about due, and someone in the back muttering 'What is that knocking noise?' "

"I see what you mean," he agreed. "Would you pick up the same number of points for each passenger?"

"Not really. You probably should get more for a bird watcher than anything else. For living dangerously there's nothing like hugging a curve while you pass a marsh. Your average bird watcher takes this minute to scream in your ear, 'Stop! I just saw a long-legged bird.' "

"You screech to a halt, convinced you've just slaughtered your favorite Celtic, and then she settles back in her seat saying 'I was right. The first sharp shinned hawk this year. And right next to the night heron, too.'

"She holds her peace till the next turn, then she yells, 'Look! Little blues, a snowy egret and an indigo bunting!' "

The Dragon shuddered. "I can see why you'd get extra points for her. The only thing I can think of that could be worse would be a bunch of pre-schoolers who all have to go to the bathroom."

"That's only the beginning," I told him. "You'd have to have good enough eyesight to read the registration plate on an oncoming vehicle before you reach an intersection. If it's from out of state, there's a possibility the driver might stop for a red light. A mistake on this one could really cost you points.

"You also get extra points if you have a passenger who says 'Wimp,' everytime you let someone cut you off, and you can pick up lots of points if you can judge which drivers have started their happy hour early on Friday afternoon. Of course, if you're wrong, this one is going to cost you plenty."

"Do you have hazards besides your riders and other vehicles?" the Dragon asked.

"Yes indeed," I told him. "There's the sweet little old lady who sprints across Quincy Shore Drive; you see her picture on posters everywhere. Then there's the newspaper person who breakdances along the white line at Neponset Circle. You get 30 points for not hitting her and 50 points if you avoid him. An extra ten points if you don't say anything you wouldn't want your children to hear."

"Sounds exciting," the Dragon siad. "How do they decide who gets the gold, the silver and the bronze?"

"Oh," I explained, "these things just qualify you for the Olympics. Once you get to Los Angeles we get into the really heavy stuff. Things like 'Road Block Hopping,' 'Rotary Reversing,' 'Jumpstarting,' 'Tailgater Evading,' and that most fearsome of all feats . . . "

"You mean?" he asked.

I nodded. "Driving After Parking Under a Bridge Where 5,927 Pigeons Roost."

Orthopedic physical therapy . . .

In one room is the "gym," equipped with the latest high-technology for helping to strengthen weakened muscles. There's a hot and cool whirlpool, a Cybex Orthotron, which enables the patient to perform isokenetic exercises at varying degrees of difficulty. A Hydra fitness machine is for the total body — helping strengthen arms, joints and abdomen. A stationary bicycle provides the rider with pulse rate, respiration readings and blood pressures.

Perhaps the most ingenious piece of equipment is an ultrasound, the latest scientific machinery. Through vibrations which produce heat, this equipment is used to relieve bursitis, tendonitis and muscle spasms. This machine creates heat much deeper than a heat pack could ever provide, Magill noted. Heat and ice therapy is provided, as well as traction for disk and nerve problems.

Magill and Gardner are excited about the new business, and the special service it will provide people in this area. In addition to injured patients, Magill and Gardner will also supervise exercise programs established for patients undergoing cardiac rehabilitation.

Report from the State House

By Mary Jeanette Murray

ALL THE FACTS ARE IN Fact 1: The Massachusetts House of Representatives recently passed by an overwhelming majority two Republican-sponsored tax cuts that will affect millions of citizens in the Commonwealth:

A Homeowners Mortgage Interest Deduction — Those of us who are currently paying a mortgage on their own home located in Massachusetts will soon be able to deduct 50 percent of the total mortgage interest up to $2,500 on their state income tax; and

An Unearned Income Deduction for Senior Citizens — will phase-in, over the next three years, the repeal of the punitive 10 percent state tax on unearned income of those 65 years-of-age or older. Currently, this prohibitive tax rate is the highest in the nation.

Fact 2: The Senate leadership has publicly stated the Senate will not consider the two Republican tax cutting measures when that body takes up their budget next week. In a secret caucus earlier last week, the Senate decided to ignore the House tax cuts and additional local aid. However, they will consider leaving intact the $70 million in pet projects which was added by the Governor and the Legislature.

Fact 3: Senior officials within the Governor's administration recently said that Massachusetts will take in well over $100 million more in revenue this fiscal year than had been anticipated.

At the time he released the House budget document, H5600, Chairman of Ways and Means Creedon asserted that because of the booming economy, we have surplus estimates considerably more than $100 million, and perhaps as high as a quarter of a billion dollars. Other fiscal experts have echoed these projections.

The facts are in. Now you must decide.

I know we deserve the homeowners mortgage interest deduction and the unearned income deduction for our senior citizens. If you feel the same as I do, let your Senator know of your interest as soon as possible.

If you don't the tax cuts voted for overwhelmingly by the House and enthusiastically by all citizens will be snatched from our hands and wasted by the Legislature.

Meeting to be set with DEQE

No meeting between Sewer Commission Chairman Charlie DeSantis and the DEQE has been scheduled, but a time should be established soon.

According to commission member Ted Guild, chairman DeSantis is working to arrange a meeting with the state officials about the alternative waste water management plan. Guild added "the commission is dealing with some optimism at this point" regarding the town's chances of netting state and federal funds for the alternative plan.

The optimism of the state officials is not as plentiful as the two commissioners. At a public hearing held last week to discuss the plan proposed by Ward Engineering, one state official said a portion of the plan would probably be funded at 50 percent of the total, rather than the anticipated 94 percent.

Robert Cady of the state Division of Water Pollution Control told the audience members last week that increased demands on reduced appropriations from the state, limit Cohasset's chances of receiving anticipated funds. He estimated that a reduction in state grant monies could inflate Cohasset's expenditures from a proposed $1.1 million to twice that amount.

Throughout last week's discussion, commission chairman DeSantis retained confidence that even if the state does not fund the project at the anticipated level, the commission would appeal that decision to the federal Environmental Protection Agency. Guild agreed this was a viable option for the commission to follow.

Sewer commissioner Joseph Gwinn is the only dissenter of that group. It is his opinion that the Ward alternative plan is not less expensive than the previously-approved Metcalf and Eddy central sewer project. There are more options for the town to follow with the central sewer plan, he stated.

Under the Ward-recommended project, the existing treatment plant would be converted into a pumping station, with a force main constructed through the town, along a railroad easement and across the Cohasset Country Club golf course. The entire sewer system would be connected to the Hull sewer plant. Under a proposed agreement with Hull, the town would send as much as 300,000 gallons of waste water to that plant daily. Attorney Roberta Sawyer, who represented a group of businesses along Route 3A, complained they had been eliminated from the alternative sewer proposal. Stating they were not seeking to expand their businesses, Atty. Sawyer said they intended only to "make fuller use of the businesses that are presently there."

Sewer advisory commission member William Baird noted that the 300,000 gallon daily limit would be capable of handling increased flow from the Route 3A businesses.

Meet the new track champs

We all got real excited about the triumphs of the Cohasset High School basketball team. Now, let's really hear it for the boy's relay track team.

After last Saturday, their proper title is Eastern State Track Class D relay champions. Not bad for four boys who have only run together three times. But the most important thing, according to coach John Anderson, is that they have improved each time out.

The four champions are seniors David Rice and Perry Harris, and juniors Gary Parziale and John Rattenbury. Their time was 44.8 seconds, almost one second better than their best of 45.6 the previous week.

As David commented this week, "we're all really surprised, because this was only our third time together as a team. I think we surprised everyone."

Including coach Anderson, who noted the Cohasset team was victorious over 17 different Class D schools, including Norwell, who had beaten them twice before.

The champions will compete once last time as teammates at the all-state meet at Boston College this Saturday. Top track and field athletes from across Massachusetts will participate .

Coach Anderson has nothing but praise for his track members, including his relay team. "It was very good team work and passing," he explained. "They are not all top quality sprinters, but they ran beyond their ability last Saturday. A relay team is always tough to put together for the next year, but you never know. It's a small school, but we may have another championship team next year."

Anderson singled out senior David Rice as "one of the best sprinters to enter Cohasset High School in a long time."

DO YOU KNOW THE COSTLY SIGNS OF

DANGEROUS DRIVEWAY DETERIORATION

1 YOUR DRIVEWAY NO LONGER LOOKS BLACK. 2 THERE ARE CRACKS APPEARING IN ITS SURFACE. 3 WHEN YOU RUB THE SURFACE WITH YOUR HAND, PARTICLES BREAK LOOSE.

You probably haven't noticed but your driveway has alot in common with your house, your car, and your waistline. The longer you allow them to deteriorate, the greater the pain of repairs. To correct that sorry state of repairs, there's DuraSeal asphalt sealing.

An inexpensive application of DuraSeal now can stop deterioration in its tracks and save you from the enormous cost of resurfacing or replacement in the future. And, as is the case with your house, your car, and your waistline...the sooner, the better.

We will gladly come to your house to give you a free estimate and professional analysis to prove how little it costs to maintain your driveway like your car, your house and your waistline.

Advisors angered over salary transfer

The Advisory Board voted Tuesday night to table a request for a transfer of $3,600 from the reserve account to the Selectmen's account for secretaries' salaries.

Board members present did not have the exact balance of the reserve fund, and decided to wait until Thursday's meeting when they were sure of the balance.

Executive Secretary Mark Lanza said the sum is necessary to pay the salaries of some secretaries until the end of the fiscal year June 30.

Advisory Board member Jackie Dormitzer asked why this money wasn't budgeted in the FY 1984 budget. Lanza said the FY '84 budget was drafted in the fall of 1982 and changes in the town's structure were not anticipated.

For example, he said, the Sandy Beach stickers are now handled by the Recreation Dept. which falls under the selectmen's budget. Beach stickers had been the responsibility of the Police Dept.

Cohasset has required beach stickers for years; so money should have been budgeted somewhere, advisor Dick Horn said. Lanza said the cost in man-hours was consumed by the Police Dept. and was not figured in as a separate line item in the police department's budget.

Lanza also said the addition of two selectmen's positions since the budget was drafted has created increased expenses. Five selectmen generate more work for a secretary than three, he said.

Selectman Frank England said the board is taking a more aggressive position on enforcing bylaws and is therefore producing more work than the three-member board.

"I'm concerned that in some departments, the secretaries aren't being fully utilized. If another department isn't utilizing a part-time secretary, we should look at placing her somewhere else," Dormitzer said.

When asked why he waited until the money almost ran out before making his request, Lanza said he had told Board Chairman Jim Lagrotteria six months ago.

The budget appropriated money for two secretaries to work 35 hours a week. They've been collectively averaging 90 hours a week because they're doing more work for various town departments than before, Lanza said.

Lagrotteria confirmed that Lanza had informed him of the budget problems. "He has apprised me of the fact that he's been in trouble. I was assuming it was a catch up process. I just hope we're not creating work because we're hiring people."

At Thursday night's meeting the board will discuss the upgrading of the town's computers, a proposed amendment to the zoning bylaws relative to earth-moving regulations and the possible renovation of the Bates building.

Also, the board will discuss the town's landfill problems. They'll investigate purchasing a front-end loader to pick up and transfer trash, or the alternative of building a roadway so that residents can drive into the landfill and dump their own trash.

Sewer meeting . . .

commissioner Lot Bates, expressed concern about the intra-municipal arrangement between Hull and Cohasset. Bliss questioned whether a regional sewer commission would allow more input into the maintenance and operation of the Hull treatment plant.

Bates worried that if all the proposed condominium and housing development occurs in Hull, perhaps Cohasset would eventually be eliminated from use of the Hull plant.

Throughout the hearing, DeSantis emphasized that if the government was willing to approve appropriations for a central sewer plan that would cost $3 million for the first of three phases, then it should be enthusiastic about funding a townwide system that would cost, at the highest estimation, $2.4 million.

"See, right there we're saving the government $1.5 million," he noted.

The intent is to identify those students who score below our designated level of minimum competency and to provide appropriate instructional programs.

CLOSING DATES

June 21, Last School Day, early dismissal.

SPECIAL OLYMPICS

The Cohasset Special Olympics Team members from the Osgood and Deer Hill Schools were honored at the Cohasset Boosters Sports Award Night Tuesday, May 22. Each athlete was awarded a medal for participation in the annual Plymouth County Track and Field Meet.

Special recognition was given to Helen Pratt for coaching the team this season.

'FOUND OBJECTS' EXHIBIT

A delightful exhibit of "found objects" is on display outside of the Cohasset High office. These "objects" are all larger than life size and include packages of gum, candy, cocoa, toothbrush and paste, lipstick, camera, glasses, clock radio, etc.

All of these articles were made by members of the 7th and 8th grade art classes and are exact, down to the last detail. They also will be displayed at the end of June at the South Shore Arts Festival on the Cohasset Common.

Included in the exhibit are a number of "life sized" sculptured and painted ceramic heads done by the High school Art I classes.

Ceramics demonstrated

Tina Watson, of Cohasset and former student at C.H.S., gave a two-day demonstration to the Junior and Senior High Art classes in the art of ceramic wheel throwing.

Tina has widely exhibited and sold her works throughout the entire N.E. area. Currently her ceramic output is primarily shown and sold at the Cohasset Handware Pottery Loft.

Her demonstration in centering, bringing up and forming the clay, and finally finishing the pot was greatly appreciated by the students, who in turn attempted to center their own pots with varying success. But as Tina pointed out, "just keep working at it and it will finally come to you."

Teens exploring careers

Thursday, May 10, the Guidance Department, in conjunction with the Cohasset Social Service League, presented an assembly for present tenth and eleventh graders to publicize the T.E.C.—Teens Exploring Careers—Summer Internship Program. The Cohasset Social Service League is sponsoring this work experience program this summer.

This Summer Intern Program will be a two week volunteer work experience for students currently enrolled in both tenth and eleventh grades so that they might get a comprehensive view of a particular career. Students making application will be matched with a local employer according to that student's career interests.

At the assembly Thursday, Ann Hublitz presented an overview of the program. Suzanne Collins, Julie Hoogeveen, Beth Riley, Jay Contis, Jim Martin, Mason Sandell, Tracy Fitzpatrick, Vicki Spooner and Kirsty Munro, all shared their experiences as last year's participants.

Anne Porter, Guidance Counselor/Career Advisor, asked students to sign an Interest Survey indicating why they would like to be interviewed for this summer's internship program. Interviews will be held this week in the Guidance Office. The Social Service League and Guidance Department were very pleased with the high student interest in the T.E.C. experience.

Deer Hill Mathematics Contest

(This bit of news from the Deer Hill School was written by Erin Chase.—Ed.)

The Deer Hill fifth and sixth graders took part in the New England Mathematics League contest March 6. Any sixth grader who wished, and several selected fifth graders, participated in this math test.

The test was held in the school auditorium. Students in 618 New England schools also took this test March 6. Each school compiled and sent in their top five scores.

Deer Hill's top scorer was fifth grader Michael Cisnerous, with the score of 38 correct out of 40. Completing the top five were sixth graders Zach Hockeppel and Allison Kornet (32-40), and Kerri Anglin and Noah Hill (31-40).

Thanks to Michael, Zach, Allison, Kerri, and Noah, Cohasset's Deer Hill School placed first in the Norfolk County region, and 22 out of the 619 schools that participated. Another round of applause goes to our fifth grader, Michael Cisnerous for placing sixth out of the top 55 students who took this mathematics test. Congratulations.

BOYS TENNIS

The tennis team was able to defeat Hull in an upset, 4-1. Cohasset demonstrated great improvement this season, because Hull had beaten them before, 1-4.

Cohasset's first singles player, Rich Redick, beat his opponent 2-6, 6-3, 6-2. Brian Ramsay, the second singles player, overwhelmed his opponent, 6-0, 6-1. The first doubles team of John Colocousis and Curtis Erickson won.

The second doubles team of David Lord and Derek Lacks also won.

In a non-league match againt Hull, the doubles team of Jason Marsac and Steve Myers won in one set, 6-2.

In the South Sectional Singles and Doubles Tennis Tournament, Cohasset played admirably. In the first round, the doubles teams of John Colocousis and Alex Choi, and Curtis Erickson and David Lord, were both defeated by Nauset. Jason Marsac and Derek Lacks were also beaten in the first round.

Eighth grader, Rich Redick, advanced to the quarter final round, beating three players. Rich lost to the number-two seeded player, who was a senior. According to the team's coach, Toni Jillson, "Rich will be a threat to local players in the future, and I look forward to seeing his name advance in the seeding."

GOLF

The golf team has been extremely successful the past two weeks, shutting out all opponents.

The team beat Abington, Spellman, Rockland and Hanover twice. The score for each match was 9-0.

"Cohasset has been playing very consistently," says Jim Franey, their coach.

This week's results

JV BASEBALL

Despite a record of one win against two losses, the JV Skippers played another week of very good baseball.

Perhaps the best offer of the year was against undefeated Middleboro last Monday. Although beaten 4 to 2, 8th grader Craig Mulcahy struck out seven, walked none, while going the distance.

In the 2 to 1 win over East Bridgewater, Craig Mulcahy's sacrifice fly scored Sean Fitzsimmons, who had opened the inning with a single, for the winning run. Mike Gentile's two hitter earned him the victory.

In the 6 to 4 loss to Hull, Jeff Soltez had two hits, and Jim Cooke played extremely well in center field. Three 7th and 8th graders did all the pitching for Cohasset.

GIRLS TENNIS

The Cohasset Girls Tennis team overpowered Abington, 5-0.

In singles competition, Nancy Walls, Ingrid Anderson, and Diane Mullen were all victorious.

In doubles action, the team of Jenny Mitman and Jessica Hamilton, and the team of Lauren Haynes and Kristen O'Brien also won.

Against powerhouse Duxbury, Cohasset lost 3-2. This loss caused our unfortunate elimination from the state tourney.

The lone singles winner was Nancy Walls, while the doubles team of Lauren Haynes and Kristen O'Brien won.

Against Norwell, Cohasset easily dominated, 5-0.

The singles winners were Nancy Walls, Ingrid Anderson, and Diane Mullen

Gibson to head Wind Ensemble

Verne Gibson, director of music for the Scituate schools, will head the jazz program this summer for the South Shore Conservatory's Summer Wind Ensemble.

The Jazz Ensemble is a very popular and important part of this music day camp program which is conducted each summer at the Hingham branch of the South Shore Conservatory for brass, woodwind and percussion students in grades 7 thru 12.

James Simpson, director of the Conservatory, explained, "We selected Verne Gibson for this position because of his success in working with young musicians. We are planning to develop and place more emphasis on the jazz program this summer for those students who are particularly interested in this area of music."

A graduate of Eastern Nazarene College with a MAT from Bridgewater State, Gibson is currently working on a master's degree at the New England Conservatory. He has been successful free lance sax player for the past 17 years and has worked with Frankie Valli, The Drifters and Del Shannon to name a few. Since he began directing the Jazz Ensembles at Scituate High School, they have won many awards for outstanding performance.

This will be the 12th season for the Summer Wind program. Students are chosen by audition for either the junior or senior group. They come daily for five weeks to the Hingham Conservatory for intensive musical study. At the end of the season they give a number of concerts of classical, band and jazz music in the community and around the South Shore. This year they will play at Falmouth and Cranberry World. The Conservatory office will send a brochure about this program on request.

Verne Gibson(r) receives first place for the Scituate High School Jazz Ensemble at the 1983 Berklee College Jazz Festival.

MS Society to host BUD LIGHT Bicycle Tour along SS

The Multiple Sclerosis Society has shifted into high gear for its third annual MS — BUD LIGHT Bicycle Tour Sunday, June 10 along the South Shore.

The tour, which begins and ends at Duxbury High School, has 25, 50 and 100-mile routes traveling along the rocky shores of Scituate and Cohasset as well as through area forests and parks.

Riders are provided with bike check and repair services made available through Bikeway, Marshfield; The Bicycle Center, Duxbury; Martha's Cyclery, Plymouth; Cedarville Cycles; Cohasset Cycle Sports; Columbian Square Bicycle Shop, Weymouth; Merle's Bike Shop, Middleboro; and the CVS Good Samaritan; sagwagon support courtesy of the North and South Shore React groups of Massachusetts and area bike shops; route leaders; and checkpoints, which carry water and refreshments.

This year's awards are a 12-speed Univega bicycle, a Cape Cod weekend for two, Kirtland touring bags, bike wind trainers and Cat-Eye Cyclo Computers. All riders receive a commemorative T-shirt and a buffet meal following the tour.

Registration for each rider is a minimum of $25 in sponsored pledges or a $10 (for the 25 and 50-mile) and $25 (for the 100-mile) entry fee.

Funds raised will be used for both research and continued support services for the MS Society.

"This tour is unique in that it attracts both the novice and avid cyclist," says Bob Lobel, WBZ-TV Sportscaster and Tour Chairman.

"For the occasional rider, the tour is a relaxing outing while for the more ardent cyclist, the day provides an opportunity for a challenge. Either way," he adds, "the event has become an annual traditional and quite a happening. It gives healthy cyclists an opportunity to ride for others."

Sponsored by Budweiser Light, the event is planned and conducted through the help of members of the Charles River Wheelmen; the American Youth Hostel, Boston Council; and MS volunteers and staff.

MS is a chronic, disabling disease of the central nervous system which affects more than 6,000 people in Massachusetts. For further information call the MS Bike Tour Hotline at 890-4990.

Scituate Theatre auditions to be held Sunday

The Young People's Summer Theatre of Scituate is preparing to launch its eighth season with the rousing musical-comedy "On the 20th Century."

The pre-audition meeting for all those interested in registering for this summer's program will be held Monday, June 4 at the First Trinitarian Congregational Church on Country Way in Scituate. The productions and membership requirements will be discussed and questions will be answered.

The group is open to all those in the South Shore area between 13 and 22 years old, in general. There is a $15 non-refundable registration fee to join the group.

In addition to the 20th Century, the group is also planning to produce an original musical, "Holy Tallu," and several events are scheduled including the annual dance marathon.

YPST also awards annual scholarship in August following the productions. To date, the group has awarded over $3,000 to graduating seniors or continuing education students. This year, YPST will be awarding a Spring scholarship in addition to the August awards.

Auditions for both productions will be held Saturday, June 9 from 6 to 10 p.m. and Sunday, June 20 from 5 to 9 p.m., at the church. It is advised but not required to attend both evenings.

Those who do not wish to give a singing audition will be automatically cast in the chorus.

YPST is famous for its "casts of thousands" productions. No one is turned down to be in the shows.

"On The 20th Century is considered one of the most challenging musical-comedies for any group. YPST continues to offer educational value to producing a musical by presenting more unknown shows as they have in the past, including "Little Me" and "Chicago."

Directing and choreographing the 20th Century will be Donald S. Capen, YPST administrator. He was one of the original founders in 1977 and has directed eight of the fourteen previous productions. Karol Spinola will serve as Music Supervisor and Peter Law will assist in administration.

More information can be obtained at the pre-audition meeting June 4 at 7 p.m., or at the auditions.

And now for our moment in the sun. Friends who thought the drive to our seaside towns was fraught with danger during the winter's snow and ice, decide to renew acquaintances now and so it is that we scurry around, cleaning up the grille, putting in a supply of paper plates and charcoal. The coming of summer is a time for endings, too. As the children put aside their textbooks and Little League play-offs are scheduled, meetings are winding down for Mom and craft classes are over until September. Farewell luncheons are the order of the day and when members bring their favorite dish for a buffet-style meal, there are those of us who steal back for seconds. That's the way it was with this dessert of Barbara Wilkinson's which won raves at our table at a recent League luncheon. I've already made it, so can vouch for it's being easy to prepare, with the added attraction of freezing well.

MOCHA TORTE

4 eggs
2 T cold coffee
1 c. sugar
1 c. flour
1 tsp. baking powder
Pinch of salt

Separate eggs. Beat yolks and add coffee. Add sugar gradually while beating. Add flour sifted with baking powder. Fold in beaten egg whites and bake in two 9" layer pans which have been greased and floured. Bake at 300 degrees for 7 min. Then increase heat to 375 degrees for 8 min. Filling: Whip 1 pint heavy cream; Add
1 or 2 T sugar
2 tsp. powered instant coffee dissolved in
1 T hot water.

Spread between layers and on top. Sprinkle with bitter chocolate or slivered, toasted almonds. Chill in refrigerator for several hours, or overnight before serving.

Working at home or not at all, working at night or just during the days when school is in session, is an ideal way of life when summer school vacation rolls around. Being at home with the children extends your own childhood and provides a perfect excuse for doing fun things with no guilt pangs whatsoever. Being around the children makes a passion for peanut butter quite acceptable, provides a perfect excuse for building sandcastles at the beach, or leaving the housework in favor of a trip to the zoo. These little interludes are so refreshing that next day's chores are "a piece of cake" as the children would say. You might even have time to make Mille Carr's recipe to stash in the freezer, ready for a snack when summer visitors stop by.

PIZZA BALLS

12 oz. grated cheddar cheese
1½ pds. Italian sausage (drained)
3 c. biscuit mix
1 c. milk

Mix all ingredients together and form into balls. Bake at 325 degrees for 30 min. Can be frozen and thawed 10-20 min. before baking.

Summer and lobster go together and so it is that we all look forward to the June day when members of the Trinity Church in Marshfield all band together to prepare lobster rolls. Though a little parish, everyone starts the night before to prepare over two thousand rolls. This is the sixth year some valiant volunteers rise at 5 a.m., for often customers stop by on their way to their Boston office with ice and coolers to pack with rolls for lunch. This is the sixth year for what Pete and Sally Russell call a busy, but "heartwarming" effort for three shifts of volunteers. If you want to order a roll for June 14, call 834-8575 from 9 a.m. to 2:30. A lobster roll luncheon including coffee and dessert is also served at the Highland St., Marshfield Hills church for which reservations must be made by calling the above number by Friday, June 8. If, like me, the very thought of lobster makes you hungry, here is a quick way of preparing it until Lobster Roll day arrives.

BUTTERED LOBSTER

Cut cooked, canned or frozen lobster meat in pieces. Saute slowly in melted butter until well heated. Sprinkle with salt, pepper and lemon juice. This simple dish is also delicious heated with grated Cheddar cheese and a sprinkling of rum.

Lottery numbers

CHS sports report for the week

The doubles winners were Lauren Haynes and Kristen O'Brien; and Jessica Hamilton and Jenny Mitman.

The outlook for next year is positive. Hopefully, all expectations will be fulfilled as the Cohasset Girls Tennis team will surpass all former years.

SOFTBALL

The Cohasset Girls Softball team staged another big upset with a victory over the Small School Division champions, Abington, 1-0.

The lone run was scored in the bottom of the fifth after the bases were loaded on a single by Tara Stanford and a walk by Janet DiGirolamo and Jill Nedrow. Carla Lucas then added another single to bring in the winning run.

"We played excellent defense," remarked Coach Fallon, "and we allowed only one runner to reach third base."

Karlin Isle pitched a strong game for Cohasset.

Against Norwell, Cohasset was overpowered, 16-5.

After five innings, Cohasset was ahead 4-3, but they fell apart in the sixth giving up nine runs. Then in the seventh, they allowed four more.

"The only difference in the game," commented Coach Fallon, "was that we walked 16 runners and commited five errors." Cohasset's overall record was 8-12.

"We played inconsistently," reflected Coach Fallon, "but we're a young team and things look better for next year."

GIRLS TRACK & BOYS TRACK

With the regular season track meets over, both the boys and the girls competed in the South Shore league meet.

For the girls, Janet Bagley threw 32'4" in the shot put for a new school record. This throw enabled her to capture fourth in the league.

Also, Cathleen Buckley placed third in the high jump and the 440 relay team placed fifth. Members of the relay team were Peggy Maynard, Jen Douglas, Liz O'Leary and Caitlin Staunton.

For the boys, David Rice placed third in the 100 and fourth in the high jump. Mike Desantis placed third in the pole vault, while Mike Basmajian placed 4th in the triple jump.

GOLF

The golf team had a pivotal week and clinched an undisputed second place in the South Shore league. The boys made the state tournament, which begins on June 7.

Last Monday, Cohasset beat Duxbury 7 1/2 to 1/2. Duxbury had previously beaten Cohasset. "Everybody played well under pressure," according to Jim Franey, their coach.

Thursday, Cohasset tied Scituate 4 1/2 to 4 1/2. Scituate was previously undefeated and untied.

Foreign currency purchased in the U.S. almost always costs more than if purchased in the country of origin. The price is usually higher to begin with and there are premiums of sometimes up to 10% on prepackaged change envelopes. You can change dollars at the airport when you arrive at your destination and, almost always, get a better rate. Do not stop or pay hotel bills with travelers' checks. You can save from 2-5% by changing your checks at the bank. Also, do not buy more than you need. Changing it back again will cost a lot more than you would expect, sometimes, up to 20%. Before leaving, convert coins to bills. Coins generally have little value outside their own countries.

An old bugaboo of spiders and other insects

By Lois Martin

Someone whom I regarded as a figure in high authority must have once told me that insects are an important part of our environment.

Because I haven't killed a spider yet without guilt. And let me confess I've bagged as many of them as I could handle over the years. But never without compunction about the imbalance in nature I was single-handedly (usually takes a good smashing from one hand) creating.

I don't like bugs, never have. And I can't move in on them for a fatal swat without absolute concentration on the deed of killing them.

PATCHES

I have not quite understood, though, my ambivalence about my hand in their deaths. Some bugs don't bother my conscience. I can watch an ugly little unidentified flying bug swirl right down the sink drain with the cold calculation of an unperturbed murderer.

But I could never let that happen to a ladybug. For her I rig a paper towel on which to climb out of the sink and then I toss her outside to safety. Happy to be of service. No thanks needed.

And lightning bugs, those little fireflies that flit through June, I'd have harsh rebuke for anyone who killed one of those. Wasps are not good for cohabitation with humans because they hurt. I try hard to kill those inside the house, knowing it's them or me. And they're not easy to kill. The first blow has to daze them if it isn't fatal. Otherwise they get ticked off and they know who was after them.

At least that's what my early bug training tells me.

Spiders have confounded me. I really don't like them. They give me the shudders when they use my right arm as a highway to somewhere they want to go.

Still I was told they have a right to life. Yesterday morning when I reached for the faucets in the shower, I spotted this big fat black spider wending his way south in my tub.

I had options. I could pretend I never saw him. I could take a piece of toilet paper and smash him and flush him. I could rescue him, with the magnanimous paper towel trick. Or I could turn on the water and test his survival instincts.

I chose the last of these options. He'd already made an impression so I couldn't pull off the idea of never having seen him. I can't bear the squish thing that happens when you take paper and smear him on the tub. I had no urge to save him. And I figured maybe he could swim so I'd given him an even chance.

Consequently that shower was spent with my hopping on one foot and then another in an effort to give him no leg to escape on. He lasted longer than my conscience could bear, swirling on my shampoo suds up and down in the tub as the shower's flow commanded. It was a full three minutes by my estimation before his little legs stopped kicking. And I stepped out of the shower, a clean murderess. There was still the body to be disposed of. But I decided to worry about that later.

Then this morning I came downstairs to find a bumblebee floating belly up in the dog's dish that was in the sink.

That's two days in a row I'd been party to the depletion of insects vital to the environment. I know when the bee came in. It was when I opened the sliding door for the dog to go out yesterday afternoon. I saw her bumping her head (the bee, not the dog) against the skylight in an effort to get out and I'd have helped if I could have reached without getting in the way of her frustration.

Apparently during the night she fell into the water dish. And I feel bad about that. She was large and lovely. She had no goal in life save to be outside waiting for the flowers to get going.

The least I could have done would have been to leave the light on for her. Perhaps then she wouldn't have veered toward the sink and met her fate. Unless, of course, she was thirsty and simply lost her footing as she sipped from the dish.

I'll never know. But I carry some burden of her death. In balance I worked around the new mommy-long legs who was setting up housekeeping from my range hood to the burner. She's still there, a survivor in my home where others of her ilk have died. I let her live knowing Terry will knock her socks off and her web out of kilter when he sees her. But that's his problem. I can't be the conscience of the world.

Still I don't quite fathom my contradictory behavior. I can kill flies with the bloodthirsty lust of a mass murderer. I could do the same with caterpillars if I had the stomach for it but I don't because they have so much stuff in their stomachs and other bodily parts.

But I want it on the record that I take the death of a bee, a spider, a ladybug and lightning bug to heart. I could not be indicted for first degree, premeditated or even callous disposal of their lives.

As an accessory before the fact, however, I am guilty under the good bug law I learned long ago. There's no sense to put up an "Enter at your own risk" poster or even a traffic type sign with a picture of a bug belly up with a slash through it.

But now we have a clear understanding of the origin of the cliche: "Don't bug me."

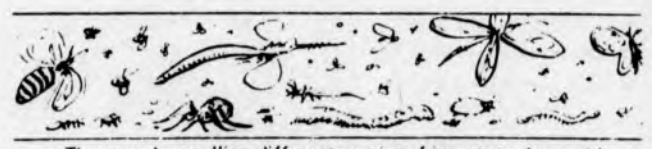
Angler's corner

By George Doucette

Dozens of feeder streams that flow into the North and South Rivers have an abundance of native Sea Run brook trout in the spring.

These fish roam up and down these streams, feeding heavily, and can easily be caught on everything from worms to shad flys. Over the past three weeks I have weighed in and have caught brookies up to 2½ lbs. Many of the streams, from the Indian Head by Myette's Store on Broadway, the Lower River at the Old Washington St. Bridge (both in Hanover), and Rte. 14 Herring Brook, Pembroke, the South River running along Rte. 139 and the Robertson's Creek Stream on 139 hold good fat brook trout to test your tackle.

Here are a few tips to catch these super Sea Run trout. Chestwaders are a must (insulated models are your best bet as the water is still on the cold side). Walk these streams with light spinning tackle or a fly rod casting into pools with large rocks that break the stream's fast flow. Under overhanging branches or logs that are lying in the stream are also a good bet. Use bright colored flys with red, orange, white, gold trimmings, such as Mickey Fins.



Look along the shore for signs of caterpiller or moth nests in white silk webs. Use these for bait and let them drift down stream. Brookies look for this type of food all along the stream edges. I have had excellent luck with nightcrawlers on a #6 gold hook drifted in the current with no weight or bobber. You would have to go a long way to find better fishing than this. These rivers hold great sport right in your own "back yard."

Remember to respect the property of many home-owners along these streams and to ask permission to fish where necessary.

Officials discuss proposed waste dump

By Cyndee Moore

State officials and professional consultants are mapping out a strategy to design criteria plans for locating a low-level radioactive waste dump in Massachusetts or in another state.

Representatives from the firms of Roy F. Weston, Inc. and McGregor and Associates discussed the idea Thursday with about 20 Hingham residents in a regional meeting.

They discussed criteria to be used by Massachusetts should the state decide to locate a low-level radioactive waste dump or disposal site here.

The presentation was part of the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs (EOEA) program across the state to "pull together community people who are very involved in the issue so these decisions are not made in a back room among a couple of people," said Phyllis Giller, community liaison for EOEA.

Similar meetings were held in April in Boston, Amherst and Plymouth.

As a result of the federal Low-level Radioactive Waste Policy Act of 1980, Massachusetts must develop plans for the disposal of its low-level radioactive wastes (e.g., nuclear power plant discarded parts, X-ray waste materials) by 1986, when three present shallow-land burial sites in Washington, South Carolina, and Nevada will no longer receive outside waste.

Massachusetts can either decide to establish a dump for its waste or enter into an agreement with other states to form a joint dump.

Last week plans for an 11-state compact were rejected, Giller said, but the state is still negotiating with New York and Pennsylvania for a regional dump.

Because a state referendum requires voters to approve the location of a low-level radioactive dump, Massachusetts may not legally be able "to go it alone," Giller said.

Bob Pajasek, representative from Roy F. Weston, Inc., told residents his firm found three main criteria for a disposal site: size of site; management of waste close to generation; and application of site criteria to the road which leads to the site, especially if the road leads through a "sensitive" (i.e., medical facility, school) area.

Although the contractors were to examine only site criteria in their studies, Pajasek said Weston viewed the technology selected or disposal technique used as an important consideration.

"NCR (the Nuclear Regulatory Commission) doesn't seem to think different criteria are needed for different technologies," Pajasek said.

However, new, untried technologies for low-level radioactive waste disposal, such as above-ground storage vaults, should be designed, operated and maintained under different criteria than shallow-land burial sites, he said.

Greg McGregor, representative from the firm of McGregor and Associates, cited three primary considerations for site selection: transportation to site; technology chosen for disposal should emphasize ease as in above-ground vaults which are easier to maintain than underground storage facilities; and NRC regulations for a site should be the minimum for Massachusetts and further criteria shold be adopted to suit the state.

Other key criteria proposed by McGregor include the following:

— Segregation of wastes by percentage of radioactivity and solidification of wastes at the generation site rather than at the disposal site.

— Labeling of containers, transport vehicles and trenches at the site dump.

— Location of disposal site in an area of low population density, and the formulation of an adequate emergency plan for the area should leakage occur.

— Location of disposal site should not be in a sensitive environmental area; that is, near wetlands, sandy soil or fractured rock.

— Maintenance of a licensing and inspection program by the state for monitoring site users.

The EOEA will accept public comment on the contractors' reports through June 15. These reports are filed in libraries across the state.

Giller said the EOEA is forming a committee of various interest groups to go through public comment received on the contractors' proposed site criteria and will recommend a final set of criteria to Governor Dukakis.

Public comment on the reports should be addressed to the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs, 100 Cambridge Street, Boston, MA 02202.

SS commuter services meeting, June 7

A public meeting to examine options for restoring bus and commuter rail services in the South Shore will be held Thursday, June 7, at 7:30 p.m. in the selectmen's chambers, Braintree Town Hall. The meeting is sponsored by the Metropolitan Area Planning Council.

The proposed commuter rail service will run along existing rights-of-ways through Scituate, Cohasset, Hingham, Weymouth, Holbrook, Braintree and Quincy. Both transportation services will end at Boston's South Station, although options to end the services at the Braintree or Quincy Red Line stations are also being considered.

The meeting will focus on the transportation feasibility study by Cambridge Systematics, Inc., and Sverdrup and Parcel and Associates, consultants for the MBTA. Ridership potential, operational costs and capital expenditures for the new services will be presented.

Environmental issues including community disruptions, water and air quality, wetland protection, noise and safety issues will also be discussed.

The public is encouraged to attend. For more information, call Steve Rose, MAPC Transportation Planner at 451-2770.

Thursday is Mariner day.

An old bugaboo of spiders and other insects

By Lois Martin

Someone whom I regarded as a figure in high authority must have once told me that insects are an important part of our environment.

Because I haven't killed a spider yet without guilt. And let me confess I've bagged as many of them as I could handle over the years. But never without compunction about the imbalance in nature I was single-handedly (usually takes a good smashing from one hand) creating.

I don't like bugs, never have. And I can't move in on them for a fatal swat without absolute concentration on the deed of killing them.

PATCHES

I have not quite understood, though, my ambivalence about my hand in their deaths. Some bugs don't bother my conscience. I can watch an ugly little unidentified flying bug swirl right down the sink drain with the cold calculation of an unperturbed murderer.

But I could never let that happen to a ladybug. For her I rig a paper towel on which to climb out of the sink and then I toss her outside to safety. Happy to be of service. No thanks needed.

And lightning bugs, those little fireflies that flit through June, I'd have harsh rebuke for anyone who killed one of those. Wasps are not good for cohabitation with humans because they hurt. I try hard to kill those inside the house, knowing it's them or me. And they're not easy to kill. The first blow has to daze them if it isn't fatal. Otherwise they get ticked off and they know who was after them.

At least that's what my early bug training tells me.

Spiders have confounded me. I really don't like them. They give me the shudders when they use my right arm as a highway to somewhere they want to go.

Still I was told they have a right to life. Yesterday morning when I reached for the faucets in the shower, I spotted this big fat black spider wending his way south in my tub.

I had options. I could pretend I never saw him. I could take a piece of toilet paper and smash him and flush him. I could rescue him, with the magnanimous paper towel trick. Or I could turn on the water and test his survival instincts.

I chose the last of these options. He'd already made an impression so I couldn't pull off the idea of never having seen him. I can't bear the squish thing that happens when you take paper and smear him on the tub. I had no urge to save him. And I figured maybe he could swim so I'd given him an even chance.

Consequently that shower was spent with my hopping on one foot and then another in an effort to give him no leg to escape on. He lasted longer than my conscience could bear, swirling on my shampoo suds up and down in the tub as the shower's flow commanded. It was a full three minutes by my estimation before his little legs stopped kicking. And I stepped out of the shower, a clean murderess. There was still the body to be disposed of. But I decided to worry about that later.

Then this morning I came downstairs to find a bumblebee floating belly up in the dog's dish that was in the sink.

That's two days in a row I'd been party to the depletion of insects vital to the environment. I know when the bee came in. It was when I opened the sliding door for the dog to go out yesterday afternoon. I saw her bumping her head (the bee, not the dog) against the skylight in an effort to get out and I'd have helped if I could have reached without getting in the way of her frustration.

Apparently during the night she fell into the water dish. And I feel bad about that. She was large and lovely. She had no goal in life save to be outside waiting for the flowers to get going.

The least I could have done would have been to leave the light on for her. Perhaps then she wouldn't have veered toward the sink and met her fate. Unless, of course, she was thirsty and simply lost her footing as she sipped from the dish.

I'll never know. But I carry some burden of her death. In balance I worked around the new mommy-long legs who was setting up housekeeping from my range hood to the burner. She's still there, a survivor in my home where others of her ilk have died. I let her live knowing Terry will knock her socks off and her web out of kilter when he sees her. But that's his problem. I can't be the conscience of the world.

Still I don't quite fathom my contradictory behavior. I can kill flies with the bloodthirsty lust of a mass murderer. I could do the same with caterpillars if I had the stomach for it but I don't because they have so much stuff in their stomachs and other bodily parts.

But I want it on the record that I take the death of a bee, a spider, a ladybug and lightning bug to heart. I could not be indicted for first degree, premeditated or even callous disposal of their lives.

As an accessory before the fact, however, I am guilty under the good bug law I learned long ago. There's no sense to put up an "Enter at your own risk" poster or even a traffic type sign with a picture of a bug belly up with a slash through it.

But now we have a clear understanding of the origin of the cliche: "Don't bug me."

Angler's corner

By George Doucette

Dozens of feeder streams that flow into the North and South Rivers have an abundance of native Sea Run brook trout in the spring.

These fish roam up and down these streams, feeding heavily, and can easily be caught on everything from worms to shad flys. Over the past three weeks I have weighed in and have caught brookies up to 2½ lbs. Many of the streams, from the Indian Head by Myette's Store on Broadway, the Lower River at the Old Washington St. Bridge (both in Hanover), and Rte. 14 Herring Brook, Pembroke, the South River running along Rte. 139 and the Robertson's Creek Stream on 139 hold good fat brook trout to test your tackle.

Here are a few tips to catch these super Sea Run trout. Chestwaders are a must (insulated models are your best bet as the water is still on the cold side). Walk these streams with light spinning tackle or a fly rod casting into pools with large rocks that break the stream's fast flow. Under overhanging branches or logs that are lying in the stream are also a good bet. Use bright colored flys with red, orange, white, gold trimmings, such as Mickey Fins.

Look along the shore for signs of caterpiller or moth nests in white silk webs. Use these for bait and let them drift down stream. Brookies look for this type of food all along the stream edges. I have had excellent luck with nightcrawlers on a #6 gold hook drifted in the current with no weight or bobber. You would have to go a long way to find better fishing than this. These rivers hold great sport right in your own "back yard."

Remember to respect the property of many homeowners along these streams and to ask permission to fish where necessary.

Officials discuss proposed waste dump

By Cyndee Moore

State officials and professional consultants are mapping out a strategy to design criteria plans for locating a low-level radioactive waste dump in Massachusetts or in another state.

Representatives from the firms of Roy F. Weston, Inc. and McGregor and Associates discussed the idea Thursday with about 20 Hingham residents in a regional meeting.

They discussed criteria to be used by Massachusetts should the state decide to locate a low-level radioactive waste dump or disposal site here.

The presentation was part of the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs (EOEA) program across the state to "pull together community people who are very involved in the issue so these decisions are not made in a back room among a couple of people," said Phyllis Giller, community liaison for EOEA.

Similar meetings were held in April in Boston, Amherst and Plymouth.

As a result of the federal Low-level Radioactive Waste Policy Act of 1980, Massachusetts must develop plans for the disposal of its low-level radioactive wastes (e.g., nuclear power plant discarded parts, X-ray waste materials) by 1986, when three present shallow-land burial sites in Washington, South Carolina, and Nevada will no longer receive outside waste.

Massachusetts can either decide to establish a dump for its waste or enter into an agreement with other states to form a joint dump.

Last week plans for an 11-state compact were rejected, Giller said, but the state is still negotiating with New York and Pennsylvania for a regional dump.

Because a state referendum requires voters to approve the location of a low-level radioactive dump, Massachusetts may not legally be able "to go it alone," Giller said.

Bob Pajasek, representative from Roy F. Weston, Inc., told residents his firm found three main criteria for a disposal site: size of site; management of waste close to generation; and application of site criteria to the road which leads to the site, especially if the road leads through a "sensitive" (i.e., medical facility, school) area.

Although the contractors were to examine only site criteria in their studies, Pajasek said Weston viewed the technology selected or disposal technique used as an important consideration.

"NCR (the Nuclear Regulatory Commission) doesn't seem to think different criteria are needed for different technologies," Pajasek said.

However, new, untried technologies for low-level radioactive waste disposal, such as above-ground storage vaults, should be designed, operated and maintained under different criteria than shallow-land burial sites, he said.

Greg McGregor, representative from the firm of McGregor and Associates, cited three primary considerations for site selection: transportation to site; technology chosen for disposal should emphasize ease as in above-ground vaults which are easier to maintain than underground storage facilities; and NRC regulations for a site should be the minimum for Massachusetts and further criteria shold be adopted to suit the state.

Other key criteria proposed by McGregor include the following:

— Segregation of wastes by percentage of radioactivity and solidification of wastes at the generation site rather than at the disposal site.

— Labeling of containers, transport vehicles and trenches at the site dump.

— Location of disposal site in an area of low population density, and the formulation of an adequate emergency plan for the area should leakage occur.

— Location of disposal site should not be in a sensitive environmental area; that is, near wetlands, sandy soil or fractured rock.

— Maintenance of a licensing and inspection program by the state for monitoring site users.

The EOEA will accept public comment on the contractors' reports through June 15. These reports are filed in libraries across the state.

Giller said the EOEA is forming a committee of various interest groups to go through public comment received on the contractors' proposed site criteria and will recommend a final set of criteria to Governor Dukakis.

Public comment on the reports should be addressed to the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs, 100 Cambridge Street, Boston, MA 02202.

SS commuter services meeting, June 7

A public meeting to examine options for restoring bus and commuter rail services in the South Shore will be held Thursday, June 7, at 7:30 p.m. in the selectmen's chambers, Braintree Town Hall. The meeting is sponsored by the Metropolitan Area Planning Council.

The proposed commuter rail service will run along existing rights-of-ways through Scituate, Cohasset, Hingham, Weymouth, Holbrook, Braintree and Quincy. Both transportation services will end at Boston's South Station, although options to end the services at the Braintree or Quincy Red Line stations are also being considered.

The meeting will focus on the transportation feasibility study by Cambridge Systematics, Inc., and Sverdrup and Parcel and Associates, consultants for the MBTA. Ridership potential, operational costs and capital expenditures for the new services will be presented.

Environmental issues including community disruptions, water and air quality, wetland protection, noise and safety issues will also be discussed.

The public is encouraged to attend. For more information, call Steve Rose, MAPC Transportation Planner at 451-2770.

Thursday is Mariner day.

The MEADOWS is growing...

Beautifully

Phase II is well under way—thirty new homes arranged in six small clusters carefully placed amidst the wildflower-covered meadowlands. The attractive colonial farmhouse architecture, the spaciousness and flow of the interiors, and the serenity of the neighborhood add to the beauty of life in this superb Green Company community in Hingham.

So great is The Meadows appeal that Phase I is sold out, and more than half of this final group has been reserved.

If you are looking for extra luxury at an affordable price, we suggest a visit to The Meadows soon. You'll enter through fields strewn with wildflowers ... past the private clubhouse, swimming pool, whirlpool and tennis courts. You'll immediately be aware of the comfortable, relaxed lifestyle in this peaceful country setting.

The two and three bedroom homes have exceptional space: vaulted and cathedral ceilings; large country kitchens with sunny breakfast bays adjoining fireplaced family rooms; dining rooms with beamed ceilings and master suites that include sitting rooms with additional fireplaces.

Most of these fine condominium homes offer large private decks with extensive views across the meadows to the nearby woods. Walk-out basements have walls of glass and can easily be converted to additional living space.

The sales office and furnished models are open every day from 9 to 5. Prices range from about $170,000 to $250,000. Take exit 14 from Route 3 and follow Route 228 toward Hingham four miles. Turn right on Free Street, one mile to our entrance. Call 740-1500.

The MEADOWS Developed, marketed and managed with pride by Green Hingham, Inc. A Green Company, company.

POSTAL EXAM WORKSHOP

(Clerk-Carrier) Starting Pay: $10.56/hour

Special announcement for all candidates planning to sign up at the Brockton/Cape Cod Post Offices and all post offices with the zip codes 023, 024, 025 and 026 for the Clerk-Carrier Exam when it is announced. [Last offered in September 1981 — and since it won't be given again for at least 3 years, don't miss out!] Career Postal Clerks and Carriers make $25,000 a year to start, including benefits; men and women, regardless of age, are eligible. The first step toward a postal service career is getting your name onto the "Register of Eligibles," which is accomplished by passing this Exam. To be one of the first hired, you need to get one of the higher scores! And to be hired at all during the next three years, you will need to score at least 95%!

4-HOUR WORKSHOP
Score 95-100% or Your Tuition is Refunded!

NOW is the time to prepare! It is possible to get a very high score with adequate preparation. From years of experience and discussions with our Advisory Board (consisting of former postmasters, training managers and examiners), we know that it takes exactly four hours to teach you everything you need to know to score 95% or better — which is what you'll need to get a job.

Benefits derived from this course extend far beyond the postal exam. The skills and attitudes will help in every area of future learning and test-taking. We have helped thousands of people successfully prepare for the Clerk-Carrier Exam. But don't take our word for it, take our guarantee! Come to the workshop. If you don't feel, at the end of the course, that it will help you achieve a score of 95% or better, don't pay for the workshop! Furthermore, if your score is less than 95% on the official exam after using our techniques, we will immediately refund your tuition in full!

★ You are invited to bring your tape recorder to record the workshop for personal exam review.

★ You may attend as many extra sessions of the workshop as you like (on a space available basis) without additional tuition charge.

WORKSHOP TUITION — $35 (Includes guaranteed 4-hour Workshop, The Corey Guide to Postal Exams, Sample Exam with Answers, Workshop Workbook, POSTAL EXAM ALERT WITH SIGN-UP DATES MAILED TO YOUR HOME, and Take-Home Practice Kit containing: Practice Exams with Answers, Flash Cards, and "Simulated Exam" on cassette tape.) Please bring two No. 2 pencils with you to the Workshop.

Seating is limited; pre-registration by phone is advised. Otherwise, you may register by arriving thirty minutes early. Tuition is payable at the door by cash, check, money order, MasterCard, VISA or American Express.

A new compaign fires up between McArthur and Golden

By Jane Lane

The two selectman candidates are poi sed and prepared to wage a volatile, if brief campaign.

A new election was declared by Judge Robert J. Hallisey in Norfolk County Superior Court Monday afternoon, after an agreement of judgement was submitted by attorneys representing the Board of Registrars, incumbent selectman Mary Jane McArthur, and Doris Golden.

That agreement was reached early Monday morning by the three attorneys after a pre-trial conference was scheduled Friday afternoon. It was during that session, in the presence of the Superior Court clerk, that two of the protested election ballots that were sealed and impounded in the clerk's office, were discovered missing.

Although the two ballots, which had been counted as votes cast for McArthur and provided her that margin of victory, were later found among the remaining recount ballots in the town clerk's office Monday morning, the attorneys agreed a new election was the best solution to an increasingly distressful and complex situation.

Although Golden's attorney, Bill McDermott, agreed with the judgement, he has transferred the previously-submitted Superior Court charges pertaining to the April election and recount, to the jurisdiction of the Secretary of State's office.

In a mememorandum of law submitted Monday afternoon in Superior Court, attorney McDermott stated that although all charges against the Board of Registrars regarding "wrongful and illegal conduct" during the April election and recount were withdrawn, those same complaints were forwarded for Connolly's review.

McDermott and Golden both expressed their displeasure and disappointment that a new election was scheduled. Both said they were confident of a 3-5-vote victory through a judicial judgement, which was, as Golden stated, "my only reason for bringing this election to court and spending the time and money to seek a fair judgement."

The selectman challenger, who attended Monday's court session, said she was "unequivocably opposed to a new election," and added it was her least-preferred alternative in this elongated bid for elected office.

McArthur, on the other hand, said she was "delighted" with the judge's decision to halt all court proceedings and to declare a new election.

All attorneys present during Monday afternoon's court proceedings agreed that incumbent selectman John DeBassio was a clear winner in the original three-person race for the two position, and he would not participate in the next election.

Roof contract awarded Bagge

The Cohasset School Committee voted four to one Monday night to hire the architectural firm of Knight, Bagge and Anderson to do the $415,000 roofing project on the Deer Hill School.

According to Committee Chairman Joe Nedrow, that company had the best credentials for the job, which included a good amount of liability insurance and the experience of roofing eighty-seven Stop & Shops.

Committee member Martha Gjesteby, who voted against Knight, Bagge and Anderson, feels that the firm L.E.A. would have been better for the job. Since L.E.A. is a larger firm, Gjesteby said they might have been able to do the job more quickly and easily.

In the event that contract negotiations with Knight Bagge and Anderson fall through, the Committee selected the firm L.E.A. as its second choice, and S.E.A. as their third.

Knight, Bagge and Anderson was the third firm interviewed by the school committee last week. An architectural consulting firm based in Boston, this company has been the town consultant's for the review of the roof repair project.

Superintendent Crowell noted last week the firm's initial investigative study would give them "a leg up," should they be awarded the design bid for the project.

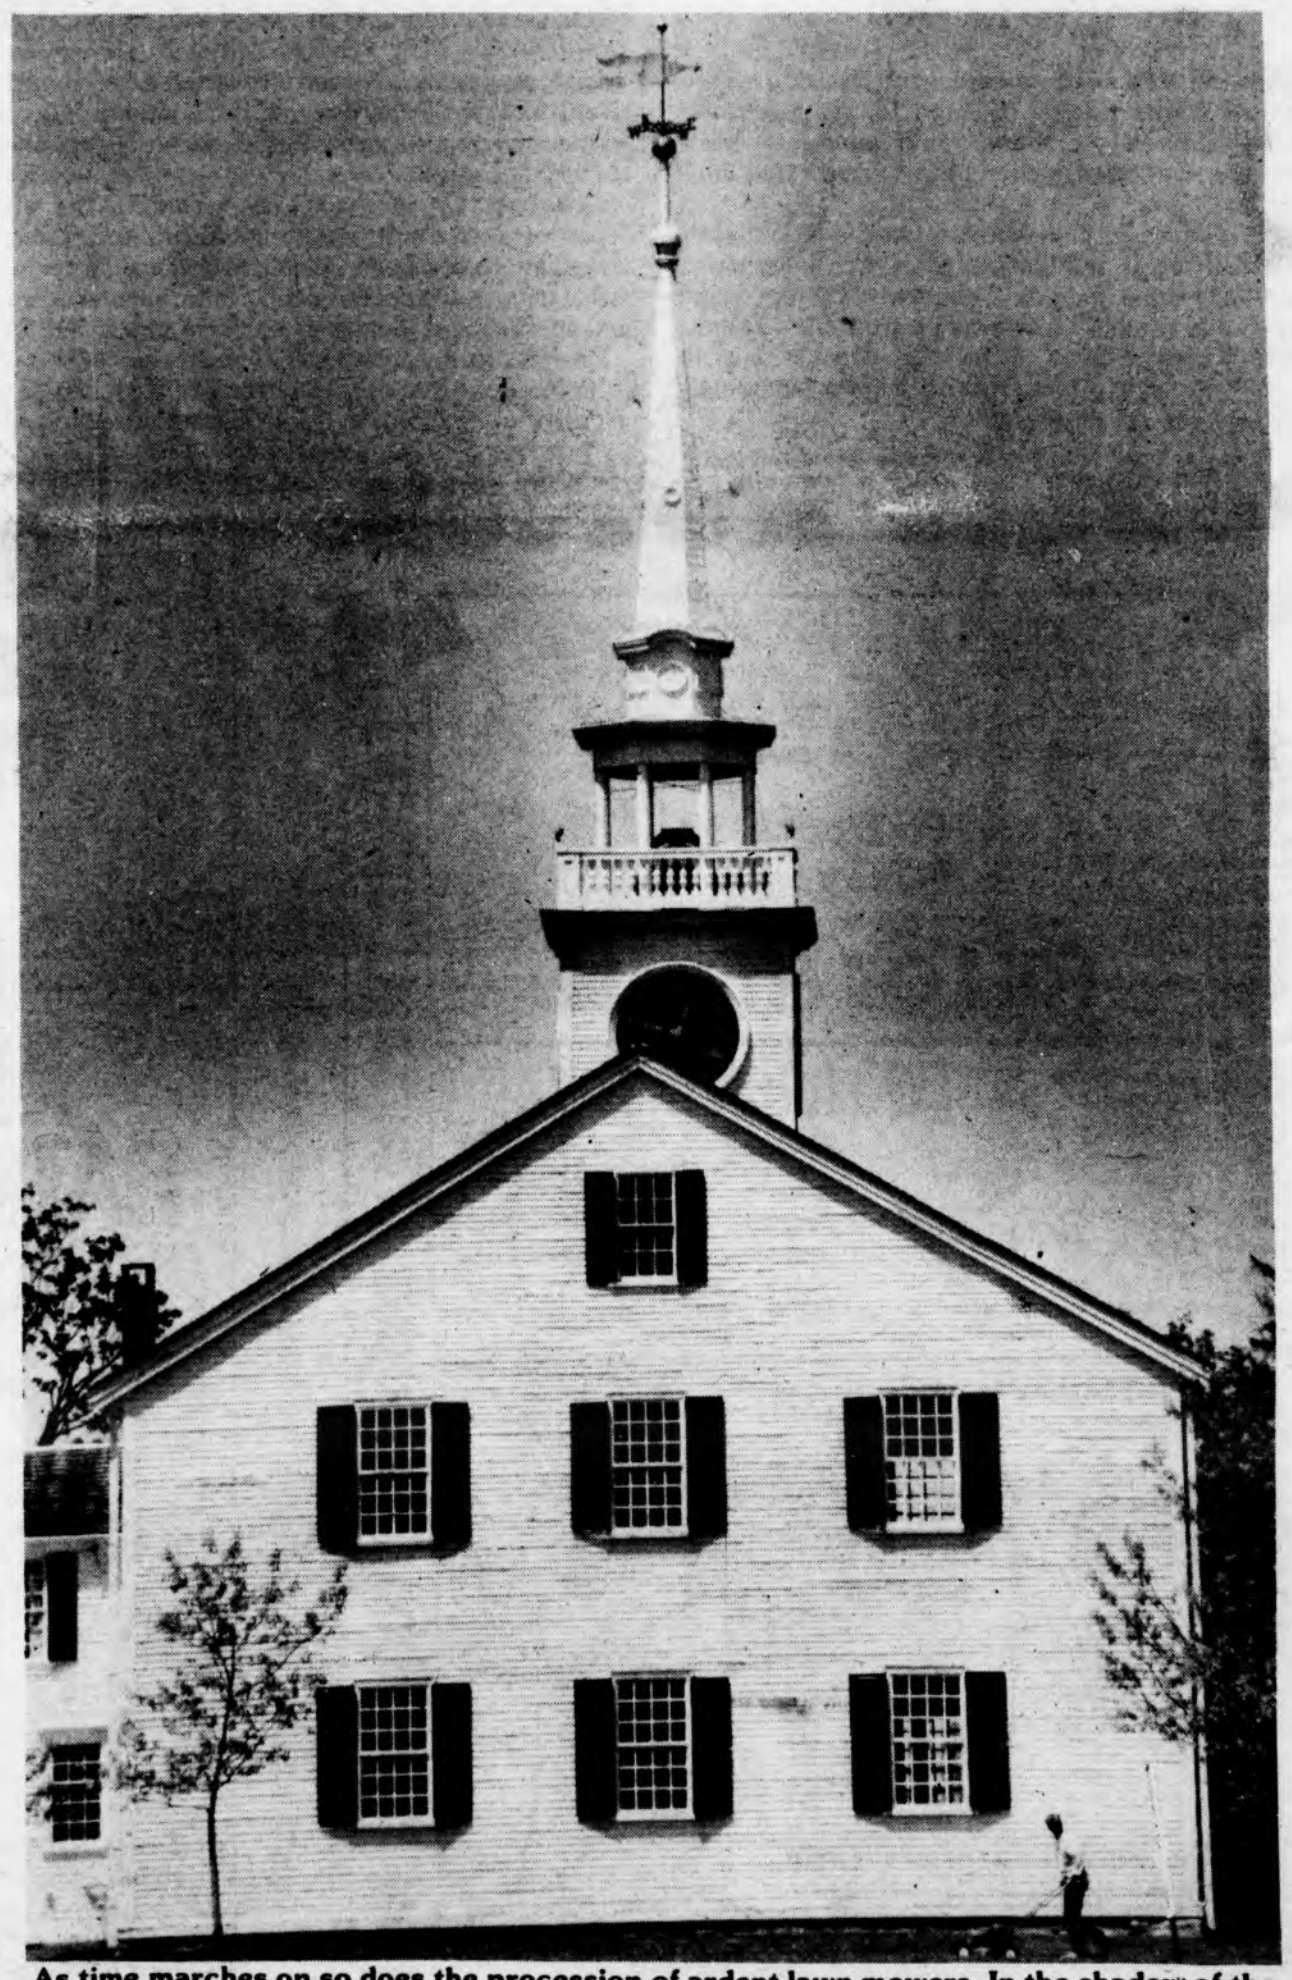
Notice of intent to be filed

By David Warren

The Conservation Commission last week voted to require a Bayberry Lane couple to submit a notice of intent before starting landscaping work on their property.



The determination hearing was called after the board learned from Cohasset patrolman John Rhodes that Barron and Isabel Salvador of 30 Bayberry Lane were cutting down trees and removing vegetation from their backyard.

Rhodes said Peppermint Brook, which feeds the town water supply, runs 30 feet behind the Salvador home. Working without the board's approval, he said, was in violation of DEQE (Department of Environmental Quality Engineering) regulations.

After receiving Rhodes' letter, ConCom Chair Pat Buckley drove to Bayberry Lane, observed the clearing, and ordered that the work be stopped until a determination hearing could be held.

At last Monday's hearing, Rhodes, who lives at 25 Bayberry Lane, told the board "If there's no problem with what's being done up there, if there will be no impact, then it's fine with me. But I think there will be an Election issues

Among the developing issues in this progression of political profusion are:

- a new election for selectman is set for June 30.
- in a pre-trial conference, two of the 15 impounded election recount ballots are found . . . missing.
- as attorneys representing the Board of Registrars, Mary Jane McArthur and Doris Golden agree to a new election, the two ballots are found in the town clerk's office.
- McArthur and Golden have directly opposite views regarding a judicial decision for a new election.
- Golden's attorney requests that Secretary of State's office review "wrongful and illegal conduct" by the Board of Registrars during the April election and recount.
- Golden requests that the Secretary of State's office supervise the June 30 election.
- Registrar Burtram Pratt, who disqualified himself from the recount proceedings, will remain a member of the Board of Registrars for the June 30 election.

No warrent reduction

Following a request by the Advisory Board to narrow down the warrant items to some 15, the Selectmen decided last week to let the warrant remain as is with 48 items to be addressed by the special town meeting June 18.

Board Chairman Cliff Mitman said he didn't agree with advisors' fear that the special town meeting would be unable to draw and hold a quorum. Advisors asked selectmen to establish a priority list from the 48 items; the board then planned to limit the warrant items to ensure a quorum to address the most important issues, particularly the sewer project.

"It's really a blank issue in my mind," Mitman said. "Twenty or 25 of the items we should be able to hear in five minutes apiece."

"I have a problem with everything else on there being considered second class," selectman John DeBassio said. If some of the items were postponed, it would be for the second time and voters may feel the items are not worthwhile, he said. The second session of the annual town meeting was cancelled because of lack of quorum.

Mitman suggested the warrant remain unchanged, saying, if the items are postponed again, they may not be addressed. Advisory Board Chairman Jim Lagrotteria said at the advisory board meeting the night before that he anticipated there would be need for another special town meeting to approve the Fire Dept. contracts.

Selectman Frank England said he thinks the warrant could be cut. "We can say all we want about the people not being interested, but we've got to get a vote on that sewer," England said.

Executive Secretary Mark Lanza proposed having the sewer article, which is the special town meeting drawing card, held off until at least 9:30 p.m. so that other items may be addressed first.

He suggested the most important articles be listed prior to the sewer issue. Selectmen agreed to call Lanza with their priority list of 10 to 12 items.

Health board to meet with DEQE

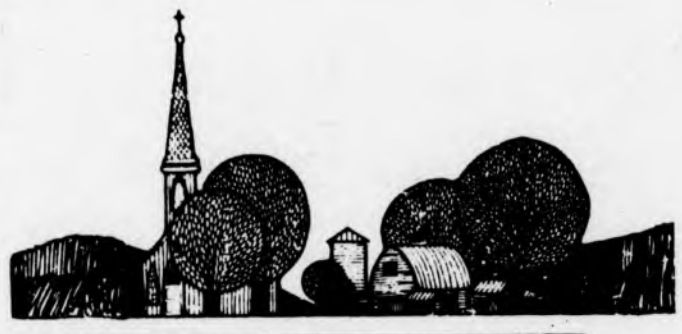
No formal reply has been forwarded to the Board of Health from the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering regarding several alleged violations by the Cohasset Heights Landfill.

Chairman Dr. Michael Bliss wrote to the state department last month, noting that several environmental regulations had been violated at the landfill, posing a threat to the town's reservoir. No information had been sent to the board, as requested previously by DEQE.

Dr. Bliss further requested a meeting be scheduled between Board of Health members and DEQE to discuss the situation. Atty. John Slater, counsel for the board, said no formal reply has been received, but there have been conversations between board members and DEQE. A meeting is expected to be set very soon, he said.

Slater also noted that information regarding the the closing of landfill areas and the proposed expansion of the site, has not yet been received by the Board of Health from the owners of Cohasset Heights Landfill.

That information was scheduled for submission before the end of May.



In recent inspections of the landfill by Health Agent Elaine Eliopolous and selectman Rocco Laugelle, a "persistent leachate problem" was discovered, near the town's water supply in Lily Pond. The health board charged that the landfill "is not operating in compliance with plans originally approved by the DEQE."

New election is set for June 30

Although selectmen will make the final determination, a new election will probably be held Saturday, June 30. A voter registration for the special town meeting will be held June 8 from noon to 8 p.m. A second special registration date for the election has been scheduled from noon to 8 p.m. June 9.

Golden emphasized Monday afternoon that several times in the past few weeks, attorney John Mason, representing McArthur, requested that the plaintiff withdraw all charges and agree to a new election runoff. Each time the request was emphatically rejected, Golden said, confident that a judicial review of the election ballots would prove her the victor.

Attorney Mason disagreed with that summation. In routine settlement negotiations between attorneys, he said, a common practice among counsels, attorney McDermott suggested to McArthur's co-counsel Richard Mastrangelo, that a new election be agreed upon.

This was prior to any legal action brought against the Board of Registrars, attorney Mason continued. Concerned about the rising court costs and a lengthy trial and appeal, the attorneys questioned whether a new election would be the most expeditious alternative.

A true victor, determined by the voters and not by a court judge, could only be determined in an election, Mason added.

"As far as I am concerned, Bill (McDermott) had agreed that a new election was the best route before we ever looked at the (impounded) ballots," Mason added.

To McArthur's attorney, a second election "always made the most sense. This is the most practical method." That decision was reached prior to, and completely separate from, the issue of the missing election ballots, he added.

Attorney Henderson, representing the Board of Registrars, said the town was confident there was no "wrongdoing" on the part of any election workers which resulted in the two misplaced ballots.

Attorney McDermott was not nearly as complacent, and labeled the misplacement a "misfeasance" on the part of the registrars who impounded the election and recount ballots.

Golden requested through her attorney this week, that the Secretary of State's office supervise the June 30 election.

Golden had "no comment" regarding the disappearance of the ballots, but added, "to think they counted and sealed 15 ballots and suddenly two are missing . . . but later they're found . . ."

The challenger added, "the election right now is secondary. The most important thing is the morality of this - that this can happen; that two ballots were missing, concerns me more than the election itself."

Roofing contract . . .

Frank Bagge, representative for the firm, said primary clients included the MBTA, Lawrence Memorial Hospital in Medford, Suffolk University, and school roof repairs in Stoneham, Hull and Marshfield. In Marshfield, the firm has designed a comprehensive plan, which has to date included the South River school and part of the high school.

(Our policy) is to make ourselves available a number of years after a project's completion," Bagge said.

Bagge felt the committee's $415,000 estimate for the roof repairs was realistic, but found the schedule too tight and not possible to complete the repairs before the next school year. His suggestion was to phase the project and complete the high priority roofs before the upcoming winter weather.

S.E.A. is a Boston-based engineering firm, founded in 1956, offering all architectural services in-house.

Associated with Cohasset in the mid-70s with the build-up of the town's water treatment plant's roof, S.E.A. has more recently worked on the town's proposed sewer design project.

Representative for S.E.A., Richard Decoste, said last week his firm's ability "to use as many disciplines as called for" and "to always deliver on schedule and within budget" were its primary attributes.

In addition, S.E.A. "is attune to municipalities and how they operate," Decoste said.

Four major projects reviewed by Decoste for the school committee included work on the town's water treatment plant's roof, an old mill renovation project in Rochester, New Hampshire, the Westboro wastewater treatment system roof, and a major project for the VA hospital in Jamaica Plain.

A review of selectmen's warrant articles

Selectmen sat down with advisory board members Tuesday night to discuss the bulk of the warrant articles for the special town meeting.

There are still several articles without recommendations from selectmen or advisors, and as June 18 approaches, there remain questions as to how much money will be requested.

Although advisory members last week initiated the idea of reducing the 48-article warrant in order to retain a quorum, selectmen did not endorse a widespread splicing of the warrant. Selectmen chairman Clifford Mitman noted that 24 of the articles are carry-overs from the annual meeting, and if more are taken from this special meeting, "we may be building a hole we may never catch up with."

He added it would be "awfully Solomon-like to cut out two-thirds of the warrant" without slighting the proponents who worked to prepare these articles.

Reducing the warrant would only perpetuate the problem, Mitman added, rather than having the town face its fiscal and political responsibilities.

The only article to spark some lively debate during Tuesday night's session, was Article 37 which would restrict the discharge of a "rifle, air rifle, or pellet gun" within certain boundaries of the town. A second portion of the article would prohibit hunting by shotgun within 500 feet of any dwelling.

Advisor Tom Burke took aim at selectman Frank England for inserting this article, particularly section two, into the warrant. An avid duck hunter, Burke said he had received phone calls from 50 hunters who were angered over the proposed bylaw revision.

Burke's contention is that the proposed bylaw would be more stringent than the town's present bylaw, and the state statute which prohibits firing within 500 feet of an "occupied dwelling."

England countered that the article was necessary to protect residents from incidents similar to what occurred last year in Hanover, and two years ago to a Cohasset family.

Advisor Galt Grant wondered if the bylaw, as presently stated in the warrant, would allow the firing of a pistol or revolver, since they were not specifically mentioned in the article.

Article 25 requests an increase in the hours and salary of the assistant town clerk from 15 to 35 hours, at an annual salary of $11,557. Each selectmen endorsed the need to hire a fulltime assistant to work in that office, stating it has not functioned efficiently because of the lack of manpower. Situations and litigations that have surfaced in the past year are a direct result of the labor deficiency in that department, they said.

Selectman England noted that if the advisors had backed a recommendation at the annual town meeting to hire a fulltime assistant clerk, the article would have been approved. He added there was a justifiable need for the fulltime position in this office.

An approximate $12,000 request from Fire Chief Martin Dooley to purchase 25 portable pagers for the call force, and to relocate the town's radio base station, will probably be postponed. The chief is currently on vacation and the exact finances of the purchase have not been settled, according to Executive Secretary Mark Lanza.

Neither selectmen nor the advisors were about to begin a lengthy discussion on the merits of article 48, the request to fund the Ward Engineering alternative sewer plan. Selectmen chairman Mitman said although he had doubts about the proposed plan, and warned the town "should not be blinded by the cost issue," he worried that if the article failed, "we've shot ourselves in the foot."

Mitman noted, "it looks like this article will probably pass. But I hate to see it not pass and have nothing."

Advisor Grant added that both groups should become well acquainted with the Ward plan "and go into town meeting informed."

Another article which will probably be recommended for postponement is the Government Island Pier Improvement Project. Because no town group is in complete agreement with the proposal, the only alternative is not to bring it before the voters.

Mary Jane McArthur said that would be the wisest alternative, although she added, "it's hard to believe that some plan couldn't have been worked out to the satisfaction of everyone." The article was originally slated for the April town meeting, but continual disagreement and opposition to the plan forced the town to postpone it for further investigation until the special meeting.

Among the other articles discussed was a $5000 request to purchase a used van for the dog officer; an addition to the selectmen's and building department's secretarial personnel and at least $2000 to renovate office space to accommodate that change; at the most, $55,000 to design and reconstruct the Mill Bridge railings; a $8000 request to renovate the North Cohasset fire station; and at the most, an $8000 request to renovate the interior of the first floor of the Bates Building for use as a planning board office.

Advisors also listened to a request that about $40,000 may be needed to update the computer hardware for the system purchased last year for the town offices. Lanza said complaints about the system have necessitated an upgrading of the system which is currently overloaded.

Committee awards roofing contract

Russ Gerard, S.E.A. architect, told the school committee its proposed roofing schedule was too tight for the job to be completed by the summer's end.

At a planning price of $5/square foot (which may vary, for example, with the amount of demolition required), S.E.A. proposed a fee of $439,000 for the 87,000 square feet under consideration for roof repairs at both schools, which is slightly above the committee's proposed $415,000.

S.E.A.'s figure does not include interior roof work since roofing contractors do not do inside work, Gerard said.

Also interviewed May 30 by the school committee was the L.E.A. Group, a Boston-based engineering, architectural and planning firm with a staff of 14, comprising a separate roofing division.

Major clients of L.E.A. include Stop & Shop, United Parcel Services, Ocean Spray, Northern Essex Community College, UMass/Boston, and Princeton University, senior vice president, James Jacobs, told the school committee.

The firm's most recent large-scale project involved a radical design of a parking deck on top of a roof at UMass/Boston, which is in the construction phase now, Mark Kelly, engineer for L.E.A., told the committee. This project required L.E.A. to pare a $1 million cost down to a budgeted $300,000.

"L.E.A. does go into a project with a complete plan and with someone assigned to the project on a day-to-day basis, Kelly said.

Bill Brown, designer for L.E.A. who reviewed Deer Hill and the junior/senior high for the firm's proposal, suggested the school committee prioritize areas of greatest need.

Brown also strongly suggested roofing over all skylights out of function so as to eliminate any flashing problems.

Although a complete survey would be needed, L.E.A. representatives told the school committee its $415,000 budget would be possible to meet if a scheme of resurfacing and replacing were devised.

School superintendent, Eugene Crowell, asked L.E.A. representatives if they would be agreeable to working with a knowledgeable town employee as the full-time observer of the roof repairs, rather than using someone from L.E.A. Jacobs said this arrangement could also save the town money, but his firm felt it most important to have a full-time observer on the project.

All three firms agreed on the greater need for repairs at the Deer Hill School, and noted interior damage at Deer Hill was not present at the junior/senior high.

Class size policy addressed

By Mollie Maurer

The Cohasset School Committee voted Monday night to reduce kindergarten class size in the Fall by adding an additional section, and a half-time teacher if class enrollment remains above 70.

Currently there are 76 children enrolled in kindergarten for the Fall and there are only three classes. Superintendent Crowell said, "This is one more than we can tolerate in terms of class size...our long-term Cohasset tradition has always said no more than 25 youngsters per kindergarten teacher."

One parent expressed her concern for children moving from a teacher-student ratio of seven to one in nursery school to the kindergarten ratio of about 18 to one. She said, "I'm confused as to why 25 is an acceptable number. I think it's a very unacceptable number. Twenty-five is not a number we should be happy with."

With the addition of a fourth kindergarten class there should be about 18 students per teacher, depending on new residents or those who have moved this summer. If the enrollment falls below 79, the fourth class would not be added and there could be as many as 23 children per teacher. But if House Bill 5000 passes through the legislature, kindergarten classes will be mandated to 20 students per teacher.

COMPUTER SYSTEM PURCHASE

There has been a constant increase in student enrollment in computer courses at Cohasset schools. To deal with this influx, the School Committee voted unanimously Monday night to purchase $20,000 worth of computer hardware and software.

The computers will be Radio Shack TRS 80s. The Committee feels that they have had good luck with the TRS 80s they presently have, repair service is readily available, and they are about $2,000 cheaper than the Apple. The Apples in the Junior/Senior High School will be traded with the Deer Hill School's TRS 80s.

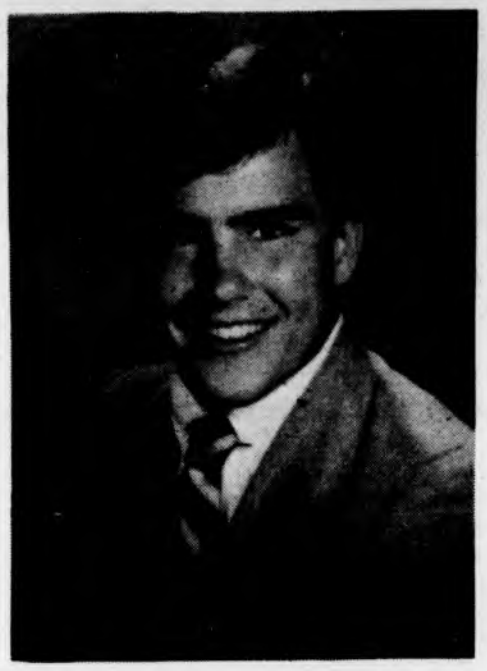
The computers will be implemented into the math, science and business departments in the Junior/Senior High School.

One thousand dollars of the $20,000 allocated for computers will be reserved for repairs and supplies for the computers at the Joseph Osgood School. Superintendent Crowell said, "It would be quite unfair to not let them have anything."

Talking information center annual readathon

The Talking Information Center (TIC) will be holding its Second Annual Readathon on the weekend of June 16-17.

TIC is a radio reading service which provides the reading of daily newspapers, books, over 40 magazines, shopping information, original radio drama and talk shows to over 2,300 visually impared persons across Massachusetts.



TIC operates stations in Marshfield, Boston, North Dartmouth and Worcester.

The purpose of the Readathon is two-fold, according to Ron Bersani, Executive Director of the Center.

"We're trying to raise some much-needed funds for the center by encouraging pledges for the outstanding work that our volunteers do here and we're also trying to raise the public awareness about this vital service. We want people to try to imagine what it would be like to be unable to read their favorite newspaper or magazine, and hopefully make them realize how important TIC is to the visually impaired."

Plans for the Readathon call for TIC to be on the air for 24 hours, from 8 a.m. Saturday til 8 a.m. Sunday. TIC's corps of volunteers will be reading a variety of material over the 24 hour period.

A special aspect of this year's Readathon will be the inclusion of celebrity readers who will be doing some of the reading Saturday and Sunday morning.

The award is presented each year to the student who has achieved scholarship excellence and outstanding citizenship through school and community activities.

The award for $150.00 and an inscribed plaque will be presented to the recipients at a luncheon Wednesday, May 16 at the Neighborhood Club in Quincy. Richard Streeter, Cohasset High Shcool principal, will accompany Brett to the luncheon.

Forty years later, Wadsworth remembers D-Day

By Milly Potter

Forty years ago June 6, Spike Wadsworth arrived in France the hard way.

The 23 year-old Pfc. with his comrades in E Company of the Second Ranger Battalion had the task of scaling the soaring cliffs of Pointe du Hoc between Utah and Omaha Beaches in Normandy, and knocking out the enemy guns that could blow to smithereens incoming invading forces.

Last Sunday, Spike, long asociated with the Sparrell Funeral Home, his wife Norma and daughter Marsha Dunn left for France to join legions of other returning veterans to commemorate the 40th anniversary of D-Day.

The august gathering will include President Ronald Reagan, Britain's Queen Elizabeth, France's Francois Mitterand, Pierre Trudeau of Canada, and members of the royal houses of Holland, Belgium and Norway.

For Spike, though, the highpoint will be "just seeing the other fellows I haven't seen in 40 years."

Seated in his living room, its coffee table covered with military memorabilia, photographs, newspaper clippings and correspondence about the forthcoming trip, Wadsworth reminisced about the events of 40 years ago, and looked forward to its anniversary.

A little booklet tracing the history of E Company since its formation in April, 1943, to its arrival in Pilsen, Czechoslovakia in May of 1945, outlines training and combat undergone so harrowing it makes the hair stand on end.

Beginning in the states, in such places as Tennessee, Fort Pierce in Florida and Fort Dix in New Jersey, the Rangers went on speed marches (one of 15 miles in two hours), learned weapons, hand-to-hand combat, demolition, cliff climbing and night infiltration.

In late November of 1943, the battalion shipped out on the Queen Elizabeth, hastily transformed into a personnel carrier, and arrived in Scotland November 31. From there, they travelled by train to Bude, on the west coast of Cornwall, where they were to train (as well as on the Isle of Wight, and in Dorset) until they boarded the mother ships heading for the Normandy coast the following June.

The morning of the invasion the seas were still choppy from a waning storm, and the troops in full battle dress had to bail their amphibious landing craft to keep from sinking.

Spike Wadsworth posed in front of town hall 40 years ago after returning from D-Day in Normandy.

Wadsworth has nothing but praise for the late Lord Louis Mountbatten, who orchestrated the landing. "We got to like him — he was a sharp guy," he says.

Then came the actual landing, under heavy enemy fire. One comrade of Wadsworth's stepped on the beach only to have a foot blown off seconds later. He's fine, though, fitted with an artificial foot, and will be at the reunion.

Wadsworth made it to the cliff, where the Rangers fired ropes and rope ladders attached to rockets, and began scaling the sheer walls. He made his way to a bomb crater, created by Air Force strikes. He believes he was one of the first men up, as he could see the heads of German soldiers bobbing as they walked about, and thinks they would have made for cover if they knew the Allied Forces had gained the cliff top.

There are "big disputes," he said, as to what craft actually landed on the beach first, and who was first to reach the top; questions whose answers may never be known.

The Rangers secured the Pointe du Hoc, and set up patrols along a perimeter. In the evening, this was pulled back, unbeknownst to Wadsworth and a couple of others. Thus it was they were captured by the Germans early the next morning, Wadsworth sustaining a bayonet wound to the thigh.

A German military doctor pulled him out of line to help with the German wounded in a first aid station. Wadsworth says he "talked them into surrendering," and shortly afterward led about 25 of the enemy into 29th division territory.

"Patton gave me a little award — he was a devil," says Wadsworth.

From the laconic way Wadsworth recounts the part he played in an event that shaped modern history, it's easy to believe Marsha Dunn when she says the six Wadsworth children heard nothing about their father's exploits and heroism that day during their growing up years.

Wadsworth returns to Normandy

It wasn't until five years ago, when they returned to the 35th anniversary, she said, she learned the extent of what he had done, and the honors (including the Silver Star) won.

Ahead lie days and days of ceremony and sightseeing for the 13 Rangers, their wives and children making the trip. NBC, CBS and ABC are giving them a big sendoff bash at JFK Airport.

Arriving in Paris, they'll go by bus to the town of Grandcamp, where the Wadsworths will be staying with a French family, the Robert Loquets.

From their experience of five years ago, the Wadsworths know the French who reside along the Normandy coast will give them a warm welcome. "The French are funny," Spike says. "You get away from the beaches and they aren't so nice. But those people at the beach — they see your (Second Ranger Battalion) patch and they push people aside to wait on you."

Ceremonies on the fifth include the dedication of the Ranger plaque by President Reagan, Mass at the Ranger Church at Pointe du Hoc, a cliff climbing demonstration, and walking tours of the beaches and other sites. "There'll be a lot of walking this trip," Wadsworth says. The family is packing comfortable shoes.

On the sixth comes the actual D-Day observances, with all the heads of state. Mrs. Wadsworth is looking forward to another flyby of the French Air Force — a magnificent sight as the fighter craft appear to come screaming out of the ocean.

The next day brings more sightseeing, a farewell luncheon and a big dinner in Paris.

Then it's over to England, and a return to Bude, where another plaque will be dedicated. Wadsworth wishes they could stay at the "three-story estate — a beautiful house," where he was billeted during training there.

They'll stay in Cornwall three days, then go to London where they'll be honored guests at a banquet given at British Commando headquarters.

Though he's taking with him the pictures he took at the 35th anniversary celebration "to show the guys who didn't go," Spike Wadsworth knows this 40th observance will be much different.

"This," he says definitively, "is the biggest one."

Curator to write historical preface

Cohasset Historical Society Senior Curator David Wadsworth has been chosen to write the Foreward to a new re-issue of the town's Genealogy. First published in 1909 by the Committee On Town History, the 631 page "Genealogies of the Families of Cohasset, Massachusetts" by George Lyman Davenport and Elizabeth Osgood Davenport, is the standard reference book for genealogical research relating to the old families of the town.

Long out of print and increasingly difficult to obtain, the Davenport book now is being reprinted by the New England History Press of Somersworth, New Hampshire. The expected date of the -re-issue is next September or early October.

The Davenport "Genealogies" is considered by many to be a companion book to Bigelow's "The Narrative History of the Town of Cohasset," also a product of the Committee On Town History dating from 1898. The Davenport book contains several chapters of Cohasset hisory which were written subsequent to the earlier Bigelow History, thus making it a volume of interest to local historians as well as genealogists.

"The Genealogies of the Families of Cohasset" is a compiled record of individuals and families of Cohasset beginning with the town's first settlers in the 17th century and running through the date of the book's publication in 1909, and is considered to be the definitive record for researchers of local family history.

Curator Wadsworth has served as a member of the town's Historical Commission and has been the town Archivist since 1979. He is the author of numerous newspaper articles about various aspects of Cohasset's history.

☐ Another Cohasset grad to do everyone proud . . . Ellen McCarthy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph McCarthy of Old Pasture Road, graduated from Babson College recently. Ellen received a huge honor at that time, she was selected as the Outstanding Athlete of the Year. Ellen played all of the sports, and was elected Captain of more than one team last year . . . everyone that knows Ellen knows of her athletic prowess, as well as her great personality and fine character. It surely is nice when one gets an honor such as Ellen received.

☐ Apologies to Fred Piepenbrink for misspelling his name in Around Town last week. Always knew that Fred was a "Pip" of a guy, must have been thinking along those lines as I was madly typing away!

☐ Graduation last Sunday was great, as always. The grads even managed to get the only sunshine of the week, which was welcome indeed! Lily Carbone gave a fine rendition of the Star Spangled Banner, bringing tears to most eyes. The other sentimental time was when Chris Laugelle received his diploma to a standing ovation, both from his classmates and the audience, that must have made everyone involved feel as good and proud as they were entitled to be! Congratulations and best wishes to all of the 1984 graduates!

☐ Good luck to the CHS Golf team in their bid to win the State Tournament, which begins on June 7.

☐ There are "Big Doings" going on at the Cohasset Post Office . . . awards, retirements, etc. Am in the midst of a report on the same, which I will have for you next week.

Conservationists order Salvadors to halt clearing impact if they remove vegetation."

Kim Salvador Maynard presented a letter to the board from her parents, who were unable to attend the hearing. The letter read in part:

"We feel we have not been in any violation whatsoever. The brook that runs through the entire back yard of our property. . . is still in its natural state, free running. . . "

The Salvadors said the trees they cut down were dead, and that the roots were left in the ground. Their work, they added, would be limited to clearing and grading. No filling, as Rhodes claimed in his letter, would be done, they said.

The Salvadors also claimed that a small ornamental bridge which is not affixed permenently over the brook, will not impede the water's flow in any way, and should be allowed to stay in place.

Mrs. Maynard told the board that her parents are working with Creative Landscape and Tree Co. of Cohasset on the project.

After hearing the case, the board voted to require a notice of intent (and therefore another hearing) before any work can be started. The brook falls under the watershed protection district, and is subject to DEQE regulations, the members stated.

The Conservation Commission will be reviewing plans for a 42-unit cluster housing development off Beechwood Road near the Cohasset/Scituate town line to prepare an order of conditions for the project.

The board saw plans for the development last week at their monthly meeting. Developers plan to preserve field and stone walls which were built years ago on the 22.5 acre parcel. A portion of the land is part of a buffer zone for a wetland area which lies within 100 feet of the property.

Engineer Donald Springetti of Bradford Saivetz and Associates of Braintree, explained that the land runs at an 8 to 14 percent grade from southwest to northeast. Drainage, he said, would follow the contour of the land and be collected in a retention area in the northeast corner.

The water would then run off in a southeasterly direction into Bound Brook, which flows towards Scituate. Drainage would also leave the property from a natural runoff point in the southeast corner of the lot.

Drainage would be controlled, Springetti said, so that the rate of runoff is less than what exists naturally. Drainage pipes would exceed town storm requirements, he told the board.

Sewage pipes, Springetti said, would lie with drainage pipes around the ovular roadway, and then be pumped into two septic tanks on the parcel.

The wetlands buffer crosses the lot in the southeast corner, runs parallel to around 250-feet of planned roadway, along a quarter of the retention area, then runs away from the property. Work in the buffer zone would consist of roadway shoulder grading as well as grading around the retention area.

Springetti said that when complete, the housing would occupy 29 percent of the parcel, with 71 percent left as vegetation. There would be a total of two acres of housing and four acres of roadway, he said.

Attorney Roberta Sawyer told the board that common land on the property would be maintained through a homeowners association, and that each incoming resident would be required to join and pay a monthly fee.

An ode to graduation . . .

By Jeff Giles

It has been raining for three days now. My mother's rugs are a mess. The basement windows have started to leak.

I spend my afternoons toasting English muffins and seeing that the grass grows evenly on all four sides of the house. Upstairs in the attic, I've got half-a-dozen crates from school—every one with books and socks spilling out both ends. This must be what summer feels like.

Tomorrow will mark one year since my friends and I left Cohasset High School. Somewhere, between the midnight runs on 7-Eleven and the growl of our engines down Jerusalem Road, we might start feeling a little different about ourselves. One by one, we're all coming home again.

We're coming home to a town which never looks, or feels, the same. And what is even sadder is that we knew our world would change though we never knew how or how much. We were never naive but we were always curious.

The changes we face now are ones we could never have even guessed at. This is not the disillusion which was whispered under our breath at our own graduation. This is a strange kind of sadness.

Perhaps education itself lies at the root of the problem. The questions it asks force us to question ourselves. We must constantly re-evaluate and redefine. Who are we? Who should we be?

What was most frightening about coming home was not knowing that we hadn't found all the answers, but knowing that we hadn't found out all the questions. In the summer of a small New England fishing town, nothing seems farther away than school and schooling. There is just the beach and the second rate movies.

And this is the most difficult realization that we must face as graduates: not that our education is inadequate but that it is wholly irrelevant.

When we look for jobs sweeping kitchens or busing dishes, we have to forget about engineering and Oedipus. There is nothing harder than that.

I have gone on interviews at restaurants and grocery markets from Hanover to Braintree and not one person has asked me to compare the themes of O'Neill and Albee. No one has asked me to antidifferentiate or interpret a graph.

Every time I was asked, "Well, have you ever operated a three speed vacuum cleaner before?" I could not help but think, "No, but I have considered Dostoevsky's historical context." Summer is a frustrating time.

With all this in mind, the reflections and promises of graduaton seem a little strange to me now. The only promises are the ones we make ourselves: the promise that what we do is out of real desire rather than duty or obligation, the promise that we don't lose our principles or, more importantly, our perspective.

And now it's back to the sand and the cinema. All we can hope is that we don't give up on education or give in to it. We've got to remember what it's for. We've got to keep Aristotle and Freud in the backs of our minds as we roll over on the beach or push dirty crates on a hot cement floor.

. . . a prelude to life

Don't lose the vision of Aristotle and Freud.

Spend your moments now in idle chatter with friends on the beach; you will cherish those minutes in later years.

College summers can be frustrating to those youths; eager to experience the world, willing to display their talents; longing for an answer to fill the questioning void.

Hold onto those frustrations; remain angered at the misuse of your young wisdom. The day will soon arrive when you will make corporate statements and hold the grand power of decisions in your mighty hands.

There are college-educated women who gurgle with their young babies in mindless style. But the restrains of a Wagner aria stay with them - never to stray from their hearts; while hazy dreams of life on the banks of the Seine linger on. They teach their young, and fill their lives with the visions they embraced many years ago.

The lessons of our past are not to be forgotten; experience is never wasted. Dream on.

'Deep Sea Captains' available

The Cohasset Historical Society has recently reprinted a unique booklet titled "Cohasset's Deep Sea Captains" written by Edmund Pomeroy Collier in the early 1900s and heretofore available only as one chapter of the long out of print volume titled "Genealogies of the Families of Cohasset" itself written and published in the year 1909.

In that year, Cohasset's Committee On Town History issued the second of its definitive books about the history of the town, the first having been Rev. E. Victor Bigelow's "The Narrative History of the Town of Cohasset, Massachusetts," published in 1898. The "Genealogies," a compilation of family names going back to the founding of Cohasset, also contained several chapters on historical subjects not completely covered in the earlier book.

Among them, and one of the most fascinating, was a 78-page section titled "Cohasset's Deep Sea Captains." E. Pomeroy Collier, a member of the Committee On Town History, was the son of one of the town's most illustrious sea captains, Capt. James Collier, Jr., and grandson of Capt. James Collier, Sr.

In writing this unique work, E.P. Collier wrote the story of a group of Cohasset men who commanded large sailing vessels on voyages to numerous ports in all parts of the world. By the time Collier wrote, the town's "Age of Sail" was all but over and fast becoming a part of history. From old records and personal experience the author was able to construct biographical paragraphs and longer stories relating to the lives and careers of many of Cohasset's older generations of seafarers in a way both fascinating and informative.

Among the earlier Cohasset deep sea captains whose names appear in Collier's work one can find Capt. John Jacob Lothrop, the brothers Ephraim and Henry Snow, Capt. Daniel T. Lothrop, Capt. John Wilson, Capt. Thomas Stoddard, Capt. Peter Pratt, and Capt. George Hall, all born before 1800 and all of whom rose to command large sailing vessels to foreign ports during the early part of the 19th century.

The famous packet ship Master, Capt. Philip Fox, appears in an extended story written by Collier. It was Philip Fox who twice set the record for port-to-port transAtlantic crossings from Liverpool to Boston, as Captain of the ship "Herald" in 1819 and again on the packet "Emerald" in 1824. "Emerald's" record westward crossing of 16 days remained unbroken until bettered by the much larger and more famous clipper "Red Jacket" many years later. Capt. Fox's short but brilliant career as a Cohasset deep sea captain is described in detail by author Collier.

The author's own family is represented in this newly reprinted book by his grandfather Capt. James Collier, Sr., and by his father Capt. James Collier, Jr. The latter was perhaps the best known of all Cohasset Captains, sailing many large vessels to many foreign ports over numerous years. During the Civil Way Capt. Collier had been Master of the ship "North America," a troop-carrying vessel upon which he later sailed to the western Pacific and there had a close call in escaping from the dreaded Confederate raider "Shenandoah" which operated as a pirate vessel after the war's end. Other Cohasset deep sea captains are included in Collier's unique work; including Capt. John Philip Turner Percival of the barque "Vesta" whose hand-written memoirs are found in the Cohasset Historical Society's archives; and Capt. Joseph H. Smith, grandfather of Cohasset's late esteemed town historian Gilbert S. Tower.

Altogether, more than 40 of the town's leading 19th century maritime figures are described in Collier's book. Their lives span a century of Cohasset's history, and their story is told clearly and concisely by one who knew them well. This new reprint of E. Pomeroy Collier's original "Cohasset's Deep Sea Captains" can be obtained by contacting the Cohasset Historical Society at 383-0773, or 383-6930.

The new issue is illustrated with portraits of the men whose lives it describes, and with pictures of some of the great sailing vessels they commanded. It is a fascinating story of a vanished era and will be of interest to general historians and students of Cohasset's own history alike.

Chamber meeting

At the last meeting of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce general membership, we participated in a brainstorming session to pinpoint problems and plan ways the Chamber could improve the quality of life in the town of Cohasset.

Many members agreed that a 'no-growth mentality' restricted the growth of business and the quality of life of the town. Everyone agreed that the beauty of the town must be maintained or improved. Growth of business in Cohasset can enhance the quality of life members felt, and, at the same time, offer an expanded tax base to support increased town services.

Members felt that drug and alcohol abuse are a major issue which needs to be addressed. The inadequate sewer system and the lack of public transportation within Cohasset and between Cohasset and other towns, are other issues which affect all aspects of our community. Restrictive sign control and parking ordinances are unnecessarily rigid and preclude the responsible expansion of direction signs, parking, and therefore, business.

All agreed that the Chamber should educate the town fathers and the general community about the positive contributions which expanded local businesses have made in neighboring communities. If local businesses can contribute to the quality of life in neighboring communities, it can happen here.

Breakfast seminar programs could help existing local businesses to work together to improve each others business operations. Chamber members could work with school officials and other local officials to addrress a limited number of issues.

The Chamber members will meet again at the Cushing Room, Cushing Plaza, on June 13, 1984, from 6 to 7 p.m. At that time, Chamber members will target a limited number of issues which the Chamber will adress in the coming months. For more information on this please contact John Hargerty at 383-0110.

School report

A new elementary science program was accepted by the School Committee Monday night. The textbook that will be used this fall is titled "Health Science." The text avoids the subject of evolution and Darwin's theories, which members said is of little interest to children in elementary school.

— The cafeteria worker's contract was ratified. The contract includes a $50 employee bonus every five years of employment.

— Credentials for the Director of Drama position were discussed and approved. The job is open, preferably to members of the Cohasset Teacher's Association. Committee Vice-Chairman John Langmaid voted against this motion. He felt there may be more qualified people for the job than certified teachers.

— The METCO Plan was approved, and funding was increased about eight percent. Langmaid felt that money spent on bus monitors for this program could be put to better use. He also said there should be a study hall monitor for children after school, who have to wait around for basketball practice to start.

— Several appointments of administrators, teachers, secretaries and custodians were made. The resignation of Michael Maher, an instructional aide at the Osgood School was accepted. And a Block Grant application for $5,009 was unanimously approved.

— Dorothy Wondolowski was voted Gifted and Talented Confratute at the Deer Hill School.

McArthur is delighted

To the Editor:

I am delighted with the decision of the Norfolk Superior Court in ordering a run-off election because it will give both Doris Golden and me an opportunity to let the people of Cohasset determine which one of us they want to serve as their Selectman for the next three years.

As I understand the situation, in the confusion of the recount, two ballots which had been counted for me at the recount, but were protested by Doris Golden's attorney, were not among the protested ballots delivered to the Court to be reviewed by the Judge for his determination.

Those two ballots represent the two votes by which I was declared winner of the original election in the recount. Without those two votes, the best that I could hope for would be a tie, requiring a run-off.

Also, I am advised that there is no way under Massachusetts law the Court may now seek to locate those ballots or consider them in this case.

Under these circumstances, I am, as I said, delighted to have the Court declare a run-off is necessary and I will ask the people of the Town of Cohasset to confirm my re-election in that run-off.

Mary Jane McArthur

Ballot advice

Here's some friendly advice to follow for the June 30 election. Why not clip it and give to a friend who may be planning a vacation around that time?

The following is brought to you by the Secretary of State's office.

Absentee voting instructions

Make sure you are eligible. You may vote absentee only if you will be unable to vote at the polls because of:

absence from town during the hours the polls are open physical disability

religious beliefs

Arrange for an official to be present before you punch your ballot card.

an official authorized by law to administer oaths, such as a notary public a commissioned or warrant officer or non-commissioned officer if you are in the federal service a registrar or assistant registrar at your college a town clerk or election commissioner

Arrange for any assistance you may require. If you cannot punch your own card ballot, you may ask the official to do this if you wish.

Voting instructions for all voters

1. Show your unpunched ballot to the official.
2. Punch your ballot card while alone, but in the official's presence. Do not talk to the official about the votes you are casting or let the official see how you vote.
3. Do not vote for more candidates than the number allowed for each office.
4. Punch the ballot card only with the stylus - never with a pencil or pen. Your vote is recorded by punching the punch card ballot - not by marking the booklet.
5. To vote for a person not listed in the ballot booklet; use the gray envelope.
6. After punching the ballot card, remove it carefully from the styrofoam and insert it in the gray envelope.
7. Place the gray envelope containing your punched ballot card in the smallest ballot envelope and seal it.
8. Sign and swear to the affadavit before the official.
9. Have the official complete and personally sign the proper section.
10. Put the completed ballot envelope in the large mailing envelope which is already addressed to your town clerk or election commissioners.

Contract finalized for Hugo's parking

By Theresa Sullivan

Selectmen put finishing touches on a contract between Hugo's Lighthouse Restaurant and the town last week, which would allow Hugo's to rent town-owned Government Island as a parking area.

If selectmen grant the lease, the owners of Hugo's will construct a sturdy fence with a vandal-proof gate, add lighting, and clean up and maintain the parking area year round, Atty. Charles Humphreys, representing Hugo's, said.

He argued that $2,000 annual rental would be adequate, considering the use of the parking area—summers, holidays and possibly Saturday nights year-round.

Cars would be valet parked in the Government Island lot after Hugo's restaurant's small parking lot filled up. Humphreys estimated 80 cars could fit in the lot when valet parked. As the parking lot emptied out, cars parked at Government Island would be moved to Hugo's parking lot by valets, he said.

The parking area being considered is one part of Government Island, which is actually a peninsula. "The parking area we're talking about has not been utilized; it's been blocked off," Humphreys said.

He maintained allowing parking on Government Island would benefit the whole community by cutting down on the number of cars parked on Border Street.

Hugo's owners are considering installing a portable gate building with an attendant. Hugo's also plans to install lighting for the parking lot to protect cars from vandals, he said.

The estimated cost is from $5,000 to $7,000, Humphreys said. For this reason, Hugo's wants to sign a five-year lease.

Selectmen said although they like the idea of eliminating cars along the street, they didn't want to lose the recreational aspects of Government Island in the process. Currently, residents must have stickers to park there or be a member of the Cohasset Sailing Club.

Other groups may park there with selectmen's permission. Selectman John DeBassio said he doesn't want to see the kayaking group or other boating groups unable to park in Government Island.

Humphreys had said earlier in the meeting that Hugo's owners "don't want to find it (the parking lot) full of cars or boat trailers when they begin to use it at night."

The hours Hugo's may use Government Island are still undetermined. Humphreys said cars will not be parked there until the restaurant parking lot is full.

Executive Secretary Mark Lanza said the board may be discussing the lease again at its June 13 meeting.

Historical Society will open Museums for summer

The Cohasset Historical Society will open its two museums at Cohasset Center, Tuesday, June 26, for the summer season.

Through September 30, the Capt. John Wilson Historical House and the Maritime Museum will be open to the public each day Tuesday through Sunday from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. Admission will be 75¢ per building for adults, 25¢ for children from six to 12 years, with Society members and their guests admitted free of charge.

Special pre-planned group tours can be arranged by contacting the Historical Society with admission of $1 per person for the two buildings. Please call 383-6930 or 383-0773 to plan special group tours.

The Capt. John Wilson Historical House is an 1810 former residence built by Cohasset housewright David Nichols for the Cohasset seafarer for whom the building is named. The Wilson family lived in the house until 1912 when it was sold to local businessman William H. McGaw. McGaw donated the old dwelling to the Cohasset Historical Society in 1936 and it became the Society's first museum. Today the house holds a collection of early home furnishings, kitchenware, children's toys, furniture and other items of interest typically found in a Cohasset dwelling of the late 18th and 19th centuries. Local artwork adorns the walls of the Wilson House.

The Maritime Museum, adjacent on Elm Street, houses a large gathering of relics dating from Cohasset's great "Age of Sail" when the town's main industry was cod and mackerel fishing. Memorabilia from the 19th century schooner fishing fleets can be seen there, as can relics from some of the numerous shipwrecks that occurred at the Cohasset Rocks during the 19th century. Models of sailing vessels show the types of ships sailed by Cohasset's "Deep Sea Captains." Documents, prints and artifacts describe the disaster of the first Minot's Ledge lighthouse in 1851 and the building at Cohasset's Government Island of the second and existing lighthouse still seen active at the dangerous Minot's Ledge.

The Maritime Museum also houses a general collection of historical artifacts from early Cohasset, ranging from early housewright's tools and school desks to Indian tools of stone and an early apothecary's display case filled with samples of some of the amazing "cures" of the 19th century. The Maritime Museum building itself originally was a ship chandlery owned by the Bates family and served as the supply store for the Bates' fleet of fishing schooners.

First located at Cohasset Harbor, the building was moved to its present site at Cohasset Center in the 1950s when it was presented to the Historical Society by Mr. and Mrs. William C. Cox. The old ship chandlery dates from the latter half of the 18th century, and is one of the few structures remaining from the town's early maritime days.

Cohasset's schooner fleets have disappeared from its harbor. The place of the great world-girdling clipper ships has been taken by today's highly sophisticated merchant fleets, and this small New England town has become a suburban community. But a bit of its history has been preserved for future generations at the Historical Society's museums on Elm Street, Cohasset Center.

Young Performers receive award

Two talented young area musicians received scholarships at the Third Annual Young Performers' Concert, sponsored by the Prelude Concert Series at the Scituate Town Library on April 29.

The scholarships were presented to pianists Andy Salvador of Scituate and Diane Mullen of Cohasset by Prelude's Artistic Director Barbara Lane and Director of Public Relations Nancy Murray Young.

Diane Mullen, a piano student for the past 10 years, recently qualified as a semi-finalist in the 1984 Young Keyboard Artists Association International Piano Competition, and has accompanied the Kinderchor of South Shore Conservatory for three years. In addition to her piano studies, Diane maintains a rigorous schedule: 10 years of dance studies, participation in tennis, golf and the Cohasset High School yearbook staff. She maintains an honors average in her studies, and is treasurer of the Cohasset High School National Honor Society. Diane is the recipient of the Harvard Book Award, the Bausch and Lomb Award, and the Math League Certificate of Merit. She was a National Merit Semi-Finalist and has tutored Latin.

Marshall Mike DeSantis applauds the efforts of the 1984 grads.

The ceremony and the celebration

By Gerald McNabb

For the first time in a week, the sun shone brightly as the graduating class marched solemnly into the South Shore Music Circus tent, led by Marshall Mike DeSantis.

There was a serious air within the tent, almost as if it was transformed into a church. Principal Richard Streeter helped set this tone, resplendent in a tuxedo.

A brief note of familiarity was present as classmate Lily Carbone sang the national anthem to a respectful audience.

The Rev. Mr. Benbow blessed the audience and graduates, returning the serious air and marking the start of the ceremony. Speeches followed, well-executed by Class President Ginger Ralff, Salutatorian Susannah Barrett, and Valedictorian Diane Mullen. Each one, in his personal way, touched upon memories of the past, and hopes for the future.

The formality continued as the National Honor Society members were recognized, and as Superintendent Eugene Crowell rose to charge the graduates. With a warm tone, he asserted that the young adults had successfuly completed all requirements necessary to graduate.

Dr. Joseph Nedrow, representing the school committee, addressed the class.

There was a brief lull as the superintendent and Mr. Streeter talked among themselves, and then the silence was broken as the first graduate's name was read.

Suddenly, a change overcame the crowd which had been quietly observing under the tent. It was almost as if everyone breathed a collective sigh of relief. Smiles were everywhere, and everything came alive. The graduates were cheering one another as one by one, they paraded up to receive those well-deserved diplomas.

The most rousing and heartfelt applause was given to Chris Laugelle as he was handed his certificate. The graduation ceremonies had been transformed from a ceremony into a celebration.

A few students threw their fist into the air, while holding that diploma tightly in the other. Despite the high emotion, the class executed the marching order perfectly.

As Matt Conley walked to the stage, he was greeted by the familiar sight of his father, who is also a member of the Cohasset School Committee. Dick Conley stepped forward to present his son with the diploma.

Afterward, there was a flurry of activity as graduates ran in and out of the dressing rooms, greeting friends and family, discussing plans for the evening, and flashing cameras.

When asked to sum up this 1984 graduation ceremony, the folowing responses were given: "superb, finally, fantastic, wow, awesome, super, terrific, incredible, fun, thrilling, long, nervous, inspiring, short, exciting, cool, touching, smooth, and goodbye."

A salute to our 1984 graduates

It's over! Happy graduates (l. to r.) Jenny Egan, Sara Gallagher, Meg McCullogh and Sheila Scott rejoice at Commencement's end.

Experience Japan

Have you ever wondered how the Japanese educate their children or what family life is like for them, or how they value jobs in relation to their personal lives?

If so, hosting a Japanese student can answer these questions . . . make way for a very enriching summer. The sharing and the enthusiasm of this unique opportunity is what Cultural Homestay Institute, a non-profit, public benefit organization, is all about.

It has been five years since the first Japanese summer program came to Cohasset with over 50 families participating and 71 Japanese students falling in love with the area. The three-to-four week program includes morning English conversation classes each day with afternoon field trips to historic or cultural spots.

Margot Cheel, returning area co-ordinator, expects 20 or more students this summer and is looking forward to former hosts participating and introducing new families to this rewarding cultural exchange.

This year's dates are: July 22 to August 21. Interested families may contact Mrs. Cheel for further information at 383-9184.

Food cooperative

June 6 and 20, the 27 members will be distributing food from 11:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. All interested people are invited to come by and get to know us.

You may buy leftover items such as cheese, dairy, produce, grains, and bread. Feel free to talk to members about the experience of working cooperatively.

If you are interested in joining our co-op, we invite you to come work with us to get the experience and see if you like it. Summer Co-op meets only July 18 and Aug. 15. Membership will open in September.

Vacation Bible School

Many churches in Hingham will be conducting Vacation Bible Schools for children entering Kindergarten through Grade 6 in the Fall, during the week of July 16-20. Registration for classes at St. Paul's Catholic Church will be held from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m., Monday through Friday, at St. Paul's Religious Education Office. Further information may be obtained by calling 749-5567.

During the same week the First Baptist Church, Congregational Church, St. John's Church, Second Parish Church, New North Congregational Church and United Methodist of Hingham and Hull will be conducting a Vacation Bible School at the Congregational Church. Registration will be held at the above church offices. Further information may be obtained by calling Janet Cerny, 749-3786.

Both Vacation Bible Schools will develop the theme, "Share The Good News." The message of God's love through the Good News will enable us to share its message, to obey Jesus' command to spread the gospel and to respond to the vital task of keeping the Christian witness alive in today's world. Creative learning experiences and activities will help the children realize that God calls them, too, to share their faith with others.

Children will learn through varied instructional media techniques, including class presentations, song, dance, skits, puppets, arts and crafts. Classes will be 9 to 11:45 a.m. In true ecumenical spirit, the closing service, combining both schools, is planned for Friday evening, July 20.

Car wash June 9

Troop 28 Car Wash, which was "rained out" June 2, will be taking place June 9 from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. at the Cohasset Town Hall parking lot. Donation is $2.

Proceeds to go to the Scouts' Washington, D.C. trip in June.

This is it. The House Tour ends.

The plot thickens as the Mystery House Tour comes to a final halt with this last picture.

There are three people tied for first and two people tied for second and two people tied for third place.

The correct answer this week is 18 Elm Street and not the guesses of 25 Sohier Street, 241 Jerusalem Road or 26 South Main Street.

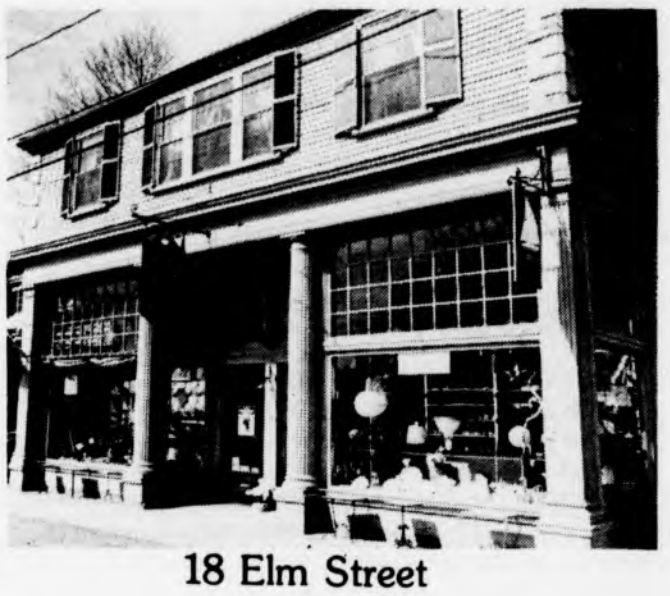
The house located on Elm Street at Cohasset Center is just to the east of the Historical Society's Maritime Museum. For years this house was known as "The Vanity Box," and now houses the offices of Dean and Hamilton's Gallery of Homes real estate business.

This old house was built before 1802, for in that year it was moved from its original site at the Cove to its current site.

The owner at that time was Thomas Nichols (born 1763, died 1825).

In 1789 he married Anna, daughter of Dr. Israel Nichols.

Their daughter Mary (or Polly) married in 1810 Joseph Lincoln and it is their son Louis Nichols Lincoln (born 1827) for whom the house is named.



Louis Nichols Lincoln was a coal dealer and served as selectman from 1870 to 1877. He lived in the house of his father and of his grandfather Nichols on Elm Street. Louis died in 1899.

Still in contention for first place after ten weeks of play are Robert Leonard Sr. and Warren Pratt and now the Galt Grant family has tied for first place with eight correct answers.

Tied for second place are A.J. Antoine Jr. and Betty Enders with seven correct answers and tied for third place is Verna Martini and Lillian Pierce.

Hamilton Tewksbury has five correct answers.

These people are vying for the retail prizes which will be a $100 gift certificate at the Linen Chest, $50 gift certificate at Hugo's and a $25 gift certificate at Fleming's of Cohasset.

18 Elm Street

This is the Sudden Death Playoff week. There are no more pictures after this. Prizes will be awarded if there is a tie.

Once you find the home, write down the address of the home's exact number and street along with your name, address and phone number and send it to Box 71, Cohasset, 02025, or leave it at the Mariner dropspot at Cohasset Colonial Pharmacy or at Hennessey's News, both in Cohasset Village.

The deadline for weekly entries will be 9:30 a.m. sharp.

Remember, only one guess per week.

This week's clue is this: If Joshua Fisher had been right this 1720s house would have been near Cohasset Center.

President's choice exhibit

Two artists—one a pastel portrait painter, the other a painter of the sea—come together for the President's Choice Exhibit at the South Shore Art Center.

Board president Sheldon Ripley has selected portrait artist Constance Flavell Pratt and seascape artist Marshall Joyce for a month long show, June 23 through July 21 in the South Shore Art Center's invitational gallery, 103 Ripley Road.

The opening reception, Saturday, June 23 from 4 to 6 p.m. coincides with the first day of FirstFest, the Center's all new summer festival celebrating the visual and performing arts.

Perhaps regarded as one of New England's best known painters of the sea, Joyce works in both oil and watercolor.

Pratt's portraits are represented in such corporate collections as Lincoln Trust Co., M.I.T.'s Compton Art Gallery and the Dean of Northwestern University, Rev. Charles W. Havice.

Currently, she is an accredited instructor for the South Shore Art Center, Lexington Arts and Crafts Association, Copley Society of Boston, and the Falmouth Art Guild. In July she will be on the faculty of the National Portrait Seminar in Chicago. She is also the courtroom artist for Channel 5. Her professional awards include the Gold Medal, Academic Artists Association; American Artists Competition; Pastel Society of America's jury of awards; Salmagundi Club of New York City and others.

Review:

We have given Adam's Restaurant our highest rating because they accomplished in excellent and memorable fashion what they set out to do.

If you enjoy the taste of succulent and meaty ribs, along with the flavor of a real Hickory Smoked Barbecue—then ADAM'S is your place. ADAM'S specializes in the greater Boston area's most delicious Baby Back Pork and Texas Style Beef Ribs as well as Barbequed Chicken. What makes ADAM'S stand out from all the others? ADAM'S has thoroughly researched the success of numerous rib and chicken restaurants around the country. In doing so, ADAM'S has captured the authenticity of the South and West by a unique smoking process. This process combines pressure, heat and the natural flavor of Hickory that transforms ADAM'S Ribs, Chicken and potatoes into a product that's tender and tasty. All dinners are served with complimentary homemade cornbread. The Onion Ring Loaf is the best we've ever had. Try ADAM'S this week—you won't be disappointed!

Think May was wet? Wait until June is over.

By Warren Waitkus

My son Dana, and his fiancee Kym, were discussing their honeymoon plans a couple of weeks ago. They mentioned Bermuda; the Pocono Mountains; Hawaii. The list was growing by leaps and bounds. I told them I would write a story about what might have been the ideal place for a honeymoon. Unfortunately, they were born about 15,000 years too late. June is a month for lovers and dreamers. So let's dream a little, about a place where the weather and climate could have been perfect.

Since Plato's description of the Lost Continent of Atlantis, this age-old mystery has intrigued man and stimulated his imagination.

Thousands of books have been written on the subject, and one of the most fascinating is the Secret of Atlantis, by German author Otto Heinrich Muck (pronounced "Mook").

In his book, Muck theorizes how this great and long-regarded mythical continent was destroyed. I have reconstructed what the climate and weather would have been like on Atlantis, assuming the author's theory is correct in placing the Lost Continent near the Azores, a group of islands in the North Atlantic Ocean, 750 miles west of Europe.

Muck's contention is that Plato's description should be accepted as realistic in almost every respect. Plato said Atlantis was "beyond the Strait of Hercules," which is universally considered to be what we now call the Straits of Gibraltar.

According to Muck, Atlantis was an island continent covering 154,000 square miles. On the north it was protected by a great mountain range. The mountains, perhaps towering 20,000 feet into the sky, would have diverted the cold, tumultuous weather of Europe away from the fertile plains of Atlantis. In this time, about 15,000 years ago, much of Europe was covered with ice and snow. This was an ice age period and the glaciers did not start to recede until 11,000 B.C.

The Gulf Stream, a warm current in the North Atlantic Ocean, flowing from the Gulf of Mexico along the eastern coast of the U.S. to Nantucket, then eastward, would have been blocked by Atlantis. This would have guaranteed a balmy, semi-tropical climate.

I see Atlantis as having cool rivers flowing through richly soiled plains, bringing life-sustaining water from the snow runoff of the mountains. Crystal clear lakes abounded, and three bubbled with geothermal springs. Wispy steam from the springs danced amidst the lush foliage of dense forests. The forest floor emanated a mixture of scents, stronger and sweeter than perfume.

Being in the Northern Hemisphere, the seasons were the same as ours. But there was no storm track over the continent, and turbulent ocean storms would pass to the north and west, to die in the frozen wastes of Europe, far removed from Atlantis.

In winter, temperatures would fall to the mid-60s, and summer highs would be in the 80s. The temperature regime was one of little contrast because of surrounding seas and the gentle trade winds that swept the island continent.

It would snow in the mountains during winter. And in the spring and summer, a panorama of beauty would erupt as electrical storms occurred among the peaks.

The Alantean winter—December, January and February—would bring warm rains to the lowlands. The rain would come slowly, softly and quietly at first, then in torrents followed by rainbows. In summer, the sky was light blue and cloudless. Weatherwise, Atlantis was truly a paradise on earth. But what became of this mysterious continent?

Muck theorizes that an asteroid, a fearsome monster six miles in diameter, came hurtling through space on a collision course with earth. At a height of 250 miles, the asteroid began to emit the red glow of burning hydrogen. Behind it streamed a 20 or 30 mile tail of burning gases. Within two minutes, it entered the densest part of our atmosphere and blew up. Two giant sections, each weighing billions of tons, plunged into the sea. One ripped through the earth's crust at one of its sensitive points, the Atlantic Ridge, setting off every submerged volcano in the chain.

"What a vision of agony and terror an explosion of such vast magnitude evokes," says Muck. Stupendous earthquakes rocked Atlantis, and the entire continent was caught in a firetrap. Red hot lava swelled up from the bowels of the earth, spewing into the waters of the Atlantic, producing superheated steam. It rose at incredible speed. Tornado spouts, topped by mushrooms clouds, shot up far beyond the troposphere. Clouds of steam and ash, the size of whole continents, formed above the entire zone.

Atlantis began to sink into the depression caused by the erupting lava. The entire island platform vanished, leaving only nine cones of her highest peaks, to become the Azores.

MAY SUMMARY

May was cloudy, cool and wet. The last week of the month saw relentless rain that caused extensive flooding throughout the state. Southeastern Massachusetts, and Cape Cod received the least amounts of rain, while to the north and west, communities were hit the hardest. The flooding in New England was extensively covered on TV and by the newspapers, so I won't dwell on the subject .

One interesting weather event occurred on May 23 when a tornado struck Jackman, Maine, a small logging town near the Maine-Quebec border. The twister uprooted trees, tore roofs from about a dozen buildings and smashed windows along a path 50 to 75 feet wide and about a half-a-mile long. There were no reports of deaths or injuries.

Total precipitation for May, at my station in Marshfield, was 6.54 inches, 2.94 inches above normal. The maximum 24-hour precipitation was 3.17 inches on the 31st. Rain, .01 inch or more, occurred on 16 days with a trace on one day. Total precipitation this year has been 29.42 inches, 11.10 inches above normal.

The mean temperature was 55.1 degrees, 1.8 degrees below normal. The average daily maximum reading was 66.3 degrees, while the average daily minimum was 44 degrees. The low temperature for the month was 27 degrees on the 3rd, with a high reading of 82 degrees on the 22nd and 26th.

There were three clear days, 22 partly cloudy days, and six cloudy days. The average wind speed was 15 MPH; normal is 12.1 MPH. The highest observed gust was 40 MPH on May 23.

JUNE OUTLOOK

The 6th-12th should see an unstable air mass with unsettled weather and frequent showers. It is possible that a front may become stationary, affecting our area. The 13th to 20th will continue unsettled with a chance of some heavy rains, most likely about the 17th-19th. From the 21st to 28th, a stormy period is indicated. A storm with high winds may occur about the 24th-26th, though rare it may be of tropical origin. June will have above average precipitation.

WEATHER Q AND A

Q. The weather predictions in the Old Farmer's Almanac are made by Abe Weatherwise. Who is he?

A. Abe Weatherwise is a pseudonym. Abraham Weatherwise first appeared in an American almanac in 1739, and by the end of the 18th century, over 100 almanacs were using this pen name. Robert B. Thomas, founder of the (old) Farmer's Almanac, introduced "Abe" in 1793 and he has made his weather prognostications faithfully, bringing fun and conversation to millions of readers for 191 years.

Have a good day and a nice forever.

from the kitchen

by Joan Pinkham

The June bride who walks down the aisle looking so pretty in white, is often taking her first few steps toward the myriad discoveries to be made in the kitchen. The groom, so strong and handsome, probably got that way eating Mom's cooking and most likely doesn't know how to boil water, either. Barbara Newton recalls that she didn't even know how to light the pilot in her gas stove when she was first married. A quick trip to a neighbor's, a simple cookbook and a steak from the corner butcher produced a meal for two of steak, baked potato and salad. She advises: "Keep it simple. If you have never even fried an egg, don't start out with exotic dishes." With so many mixes and frozen foods to choose from, you can even invite company to share in Barbara's dessert called:

CREME DE MENTHE BROWNIE PIE

1 pkg. (15½ oz.) fudge brownie mix
1 qt. chocolate chip ice cream, softened
1/4 c. green creme de menthe

Prepare brownie mix according to package directions, but bake in 9" ceramic or glass pie plate in preheated 350 degree oven for 25 to 30 min. Let cool completely. Place softened ice cream in a bowl. Add creme de menthe and swirl through ice cream with a knife. (Don't overmix or you will not get a swirled effect.) Spread ice cream over brownie pie quickly. Cover loosely with plastic wrap and place in freezer until ice cream is firm. Serve with fudge sauce. Barbara says no one needs know you used a mix, for if you don't tell, your guests will never guess.

Those of us whose mothers were good cooks were lucky, for a quick phone call solved many a cooking mystery if they lived nearby. Judy Williams was a bride eight years ago and has always lived on the South Shore and so could rely on her mother's help in a crisis and when her husband brought her a first cookbook, it was the start of a keen interest in cooking. "I'm still not the greatest," she says, "but I've joined several gourmet groups and my husband loves being a guinea pig when I try new recipes." Six years later, Ellen Kempton has a family of five to feed and, fortunately, she likes to cook. "I used to watch my mother cook and when I got married, it all came back to me. My family loves her spaghetti sauce, and it's the only kind they'll eat." Mary Gibbons says the three men in her life like plain, simple food and so she has given up on casseroles and recipes she loves to try out when company comes, or she's asked to bring a dish for a pot-luck party. "It's a waste of food to serve them something other than the traditional." Here's a quick, easy dish that serves four and is called

CELERY FISH STICKS

1 pkg. frozen fish sticks, thawed
1 can condensed cream of celery soup
1/2 c. milk
1½ T chopped chives or scallions
1 T lemon juice
3 T grated Cheddar

Put fish sticks in shallow, buttered baking dish. Thin the soup with the milk and measure out a cupful. (Save the remainder for lunch). Add remaining ingredients to the thinned soup and pour over fish sticks. Bake at 425 for 20 min.

When Helen Woods first started cooking for two, timing was her greatest problem. Trying to have everything done at the same time was a mystery solved by trial and error. Married 25 years now, Helen has a large collection of cookbooks from which she selected varied recipes to prepare in her well-equipped kitchen. Lori Thomae lives in a neighborhood where the young couples meet for dinner at each other's homes. I still have a few recipes from their last progressive dinner and this one of hers is called:

A DIFFERENT PILAF

Brown in butter:
1 pkg. Pennsylvania Dutch Fine Egg Noodles
Add 2 c. chicken broth and
1 c. water
Add 1 c. sliced mushrooms and
1/3 c. chopped scallions. Simmer until liquid is absorbed.

When you have a meal to prepare after a day at work, it's to be hoped a radar oven was among the wedding gifts. If you buy frozen things and ready-mix things as often as you dare, a few extra touches may make them more palatable. Take beans for instance. By adding a little chopped onion, chili sauce and a spoonful of molasses to bake at 325 for about 30 min., if you hide the can, he may just think you're a pretty clever gal in the kitchen.

Angler's corner

By George Doucette

This month's best bet for saltwater light tackle is mackeral. Huge schools are feeding heavily from Boston to Provincetown.Good local hot spots are the "H" Buoy of Scituate, at the mouth of Scituate Harbor, Green Harbor, Plymouth Harbor, North River, Gurnet Point, Duxbury outer beach and the east end of the Cape Cod Canal.

From shore, casting small bright silver spoons, jigs, spinners, etc. will catch a fair amount of fish. The big scores will be made by the small boats as the Christmas tree tube rig with a diamond jig will catch several fish at a time when you find these huge schools.

Fish over 2 pounds are not uncommon, and some "horse macks" up to 3 to 4 pounds have been caught. Drifting with tide and wind is the best bet to locate these fast moving fish and a light spinning rod and reel is great gear for having some fun.

Mackeral can be a delicious meal when prepared properly. Check your cookbook for recipes and what you don't eat can be kept in bags in the freezer for future use for bass and bluefish bait next month.

Bluefish are on the South Cape now and should be up here in a week or so. I'll keep you posted.

Good luck and good fishing.

Adams Sports & Tackle, Rte. 139, Pembroke, telephone 826-8341, has a large selection of mackeral lures and rigs and up to date info on where all saltwater action is. Drop by and get the information you need to make your day a success.

Blue Shield president knows consumer outcry

By Claire McDonough

John Larkin Thompson of Cohasset and Massachusetts Blue Shield president, knows the outcry of health consumers.

"Almost without exception, people feel they are paying more than enough for health insurance," he said.

Thompson, in an interview, offered several strong opinions regarding the cost of doctor's fees and health insurance premiums.

He predicted a 30 percent rate hike in Blue Cross premiums if the courts rule in favor of physicians.

Thompson said if the Legislature fails to act on a proposed bill and if the recent court ruling allowing physicians to "balance bill" their patients is allowed to stand, to provide the same coverage, Blue Shield will increase its rates 30 percent for the 2½ million Massachusetts residents who receive comprehensive coverage.

The alternate would be for the same 2½ million to pay approximately $100,000,000 in additional medical expenses.

Thompson, who was interviewed in his office at 100 Summer Street, Boston, further added:

"According to the terms of contracts that we have signed, our subscribers have been assured that they will not have to pay physician's costs above and beyond the payments determined by Blue Shield.

Since premiums are based on anticipated expenditures, subscribers could expect their premiums to go up about 30 percent.

However, if the Insurance Commissioner refuses to allow Blue Shield to raise its rates in order to meet an increase in physicians' prices, Thompson feels that, based on charges submitted by doctors to Blue Shield in 1983, Blue Shield subscribers would be obliged to absorb $100,000,000 in additional physicians' charges.

Thompson was emphatic when he responded to charges by the Massachusetts Medical Society that Blue Shield has pretty much had its own way in the setting of rates.

"We must file every contract with the Commissioner. Our contracts, our resources, the method by which we do business, our expenses, premiums, level of compensation — all of these are by law subject to the oversight of the Insurance Commissioner. He protects the public interests. Blue Cross and Blue Shield are the most highly regulated entities in Massachusetts.

"I'm not complaining," he added. "Just observing."

When asked if he felt having only certain medical services covered by Blue Shield stifled creativity and innovation on the part of participating physicians, Thompson said the opposite was true.

"Many new techniques are controversial," he noted. Whenever there is a new technology, there is considerable debate within the medical profession itself as to whether it is appropriate.

"Perhaps the most moving and dramatic instances occur in the field of organ transplants, but the actual controversy goes on every day.

"We have an outside group of 38 practicing physicians referred by their specialty societies.

"For example, the Mass. College of Surgeons will recommend three doctors, the Obstetrical and Gynocological Society will give us three names, and so forth. These people are all volunteers, and they meet monthly to review, debate, and advise us on new technologies. This is in the public interest. Sometimes the debates are very active because of honest differences of opinion. For example, some doctors feel the implant of a silicone prosthesis following a mastectomy is a good idea, while others fear it may mask the redevelopment of cancer.

"Sometimes the physicians agree Blue Shield should not pay for a procedure because it is not in the best interest of the public. And one thing we have observed is that if a procedure is covered, it will be done.

"Even so, we aren't the last word. Recently a New York court ruled that Blue Shield would have to pay for an alleged cancer treatment that included hourly coffee enemas."

Thompson also was emphatic when asked his opinion regarding a statement by the Mass. Medical Association that patients should be free to negotiate the price of a procedure with their physicians, and a patient who was not satisfied with one price was free to seek out another.

"I don't believe haggling (for medical treatment) will ever be a part of the culture of this country. People in pain, or with family members who need medical services, won't haggle with two or three physicians. I don't know of anyone who will seek out the lowest price. And very few members of the public are comfortable in making the determination of the quality of medical care in relation to a price that's charged.

"Furthermore, there are physicians you rarely see — the anesthesiologist, the pathologist, the radiologist...

"I just can't conceive of a person whose relative has had a coronary saying, 'Wait a minute. There are two other cardiologists in town; I want to check their prices.'

"I just don't think it will happen. It would be degrading for the public and the physicians. And imagine what it would do to the elderly on Medicare."

Thompson is convinced most physicians do not agree with the position taken by the MMA.

"There are ten practicing physicians on our Board of Directors. I spend much time with physicians. The vast majority are primarily interested in the treatment of their patients."

Thompson does not believe the freeze on medical costs predicted by the MMA is a reasonable hypothesis.

"The law suit brought by the medical society is certainly anti-freeze. The society has been pressing to make sure there won't be a freeze in Medicare or Medicaid, or Workman's Compensation. I see nothing anywhere to suggest that the "freeze" is anything more than a timely public relations announcement. It's certainly hard to see a 30 percent increase in medical billing as part of a freeze."

Thompson expects Blue Shield's appeal of the recent court decision allowing physicians to charge their patients higher amounts than those allowed by Blue Shield to be heard sometime in the fall before the First Circuit Court of Appeals.

He assumes that, whatever the ruling, it will be appealed to the United States Supreme Court. They will decide whether or not to hear it. The issue could go on for at least two years.

For the state, however, the matter of the court case could quickly become moot. If the Legislature acts promptly, according to Thompson, pending legislation will insure people in this state cannot be billed in excess of the Blue Shield payments.

Asked if he thought a compromise might be reached, Thompson replied that Insurance Commissioner Peter Hiam said he will take a look at the level of payment Blue Shield provides.

"He will review it to see if all reasonable elements of costs are included in our formula. For example, there should be a review of the physicians' concerns regarding the cost of medical malpractice.

"However, we are constantly involved in public hearings. At every hearing we have ever had, the argument by the Attorney General, consumer groups, etc., is that we are paying enough for services.

"The MMA says, 'pay more,' but the people we hear say, 'pay less.'

Delightful intrigues of the generation gap

By Lois Martin

Last week someone at a luncheon was describing a female teenager as she entered a room. The graphic replay suggested that the girl did more than walk in. She made an entrance.

These were mothers talking and what they were doing was sharing that timeless moan and groan of their offspring, that "what will they think of next . . ." conversation.

The young woman in the commentary apparently was dressed in what her crowd would affirm as being a high-toned outfit which reflected the tastes of her peers. Walking in behind the daughter, according to the report, were parents who looked for all the world like ordinary fine people.

PATCHES

What she was saying was that the parents didn't dress like the daughter.

"You mustn't judge the parents by the children," said another woman. Her statement was, of course, both a wise philosophy and a plea.

Is the tree bent as the twig's inclined? Parents have hoped not for scores of generations. And children have hoped the converse, that the twig isn't bent as the tree's inclined. That happens at what is a simultaneous span of years for the parents and their young. It's when the kids find their full youth and when their parents lose whatever was left of their own.

Your introduction, therefore, to a 15-year old with a punk hairdo accessoried by a streak of purple does not mean you would meet a man of a similar coif if you were to meet the lad's father.

And simply because a girl has three pierced earrings jangling from each ear and a coordinated fingernail with a gold butterfly in it,does not mean her mother goes to work in the same outfit . . . costume.

A man once told me that raising children presented little in the way of disappointment but a lot in embarrassment.

He was right. But it isn't limited to the kids. Imagine how many times and by what variety of ways we have embarrassed them.

I have known for years, and I've been told hundreds of times, that anyone who was born to be my child would have to be a good sport. That is true and they are. But I have chosen to believe they left home because they grew up rather than because they couldn't take it anymore. I prefer not to have that illusion stripped from me.

One of the things that has always intrigued me is how easily we are amused, entertained by the teenage whims of someone else's child. But we are stricken when our own children exercise the same youthful foibles.

I have smiled broadly when I've seen a Mohawk haircut on a teenage boy. I haven't felt a smidgen of discomfort in it and I've found it almost an inoffensive celebration of his stage of life.

Let me tell you that if one of my son s had come to the supper table with that same type of trim, I'd have had a lot to say about it . . . until I managed to adjust to it and had been consoled that other parents would understand and that hair grows out.

I have been denied the education of raising daughters (let us hope that is a reasonable assumption). But I have been privileged to be in the company of young women, mostly because I've had access in my home to young men.

The oddity of our contradictory generations is this: many adults spend a lifetime emulating the young. We steal their styles, hum their music, and horn in on their junk food.

They, on the other hand, work toward looking and acting like adults, as they perceive them. They have grown-up functions, with the good car as transportation. And they choose to do all things adults do before the parents want them to do it.

Both of our groups jest about what the other is doing in dress or action.

So imagine what they think if we tell them they look nice. It must worry them. It must make them want to rush to change their clothes if their outfit inspires a compliment.

And what does it mean if a teenager tells a parent he or she looks nice? Does it mean we're dressed like an idiot in some valley-woman ensemble? Does it mean they've given up and our appearance is the best they can hope for? Or is it all relative . . . "you look great in that dress compared to what you looked like in your bathrobe . . ."

Never mind. I'm convinced that in most cases we are fortunate in that the twig is inclined as the tree is bent and that the tree is bent as the twig's inclined.

Lots worse things can happen than to have young people originate and express fads through dress and hair.

But they have it worse. Because if we embarrass them in our actions, there's less chance that we'll outgrow it. The best we can do is try to persuade them that it's an improvement over what we were before they had us as parents, and when we were going through that teenager stage.

Coast Guard Report

WEDNESDAY, MAY 23

A 28 ft. sailing vessel, "Heiress," broke its mooring in Scituate inner harbor and grounded. CG Unit was dispatched and assisted the Scituate harbormaster in taking the vessel in tow, and putting it safely back on a mooring.

THURSDAY, MAY 24

Station crewmembers observed a 17 ft. outboard broken down and drifting toward the rocks near the Coast Guard pier. CG Unit was dispatched and towed the vessel without incident to Scituate Water Club. A boarding was conducted on the vessel and cited for insufficient number of life jackets aboard.

FRIDAY, MAY 25

Coast Guard received a call from a woman from Green Harbor who reported her sons were four hours late from a boating trip. After numerous calls to different marinas, the Station sent out the CG Unit to look for her sons who were in a 16 ft. outboard. The vessel was spotted off of Rexhame Beach and towed to Green Harbor.

SATURDAY, MAY 26

Watch overheard a report to the Scituate harbormaster of a man in the water off Sand Hills Beach. Two harbormaster units and CG Unit were dispatched. Harbormaster made the pickup and patient was transferred to CG Unit for emergency treatment of hypothermia and shock. Patient was taken to Cole Parkway where an ambulance was waiting. Patient was taken to South Shore Hospital and released later that evening.

At the same time, Coast Guard was monitoring a vessel with a seasick person on board who was unable to make for a safe port because of strong winds and choppy water. Coast Guard dispatched aux. vessel "Bobbet" to stand by the vessel until CG Unit could get on scene. Once unit was on scene, Coast Guard towed the vessel into Cohasset Harbor.

Upon returning to Scituate Harbor, CG Unit was flagged down by sailing vessel "Chance," whose engine and sails were inoperative. They were towed into Scituate Harbor without incident.

SUNDAY, MAY 27

CG Unit came upon the vessel "Holiday" towing the vessel "Rumors" which had broken down near Egypt Beach. Vessel was relieved of tow and CG Unit brought "Rumors" back to Scituate Harbor.

MONDAY, MAY 28

3:24 p.m., received report from Plymouth Harbormaster of a 36 ft. Nov 1 disabled with engine failure 1/2 mile east of Gurnet Point. The CG auxilliary vessel "Helbra" was dispatched and towed the vessel to Plymouth Harbor.

5 p.m., received report of three persons stranded on Cowen's Rocks off Egypt Beach, possibly in distress. CG Units were dispatched. Upon arrival on scene, they discovered a diver's flag and an 8 ft. pram. Two divers surfaced shortly after and stated they had been resting earlier on the rocks and that they were in no need of CG assistance. The two CG units were then recalled.

TUESDAY, MAY 29

Received call from the sailing vessel "Summer Wind" on Channel 16 VHF-FM reporting he had cut his hand and was in need of assistnce. Seas were 3-4 ft. with gusty southwest winds. Vessel position: 1/4 mile east of Minot Light. CG unit was dispatched. Upon arrival on scene the "Summer Wind" reported that he no longer needed medical attention but required assistance with towing his dinghy into Cohasset Harbor. A CG boarding later revealed five violations of federal law: no certificate of registration aboard; no bell aboard; insufficient amount of fire extinguishers aboard; no pollution placard posted, and no visual distress signals aboard.

12:50 p.m., received report on Channel 16 from the vessel "Fine Tune," a 20 ft. cabin cruiser, that he was disabled with a dead battery off of Second Cliff. CG auxilliary vessel "Patti Ann" was dispatched and towed the vessel to Scituate Harbor.

2:52 p.m., overheard communication between Scituate Harbormaster and Fire Department that a 15 ft. canoe had capsized 150 yards off North Scituate Beach. Two people reported in the water. CG Unit was dispatched. Scituate Harbormaster rescued the persons from the water. CG unit recalled to station.

Town meeting will decide fate of Ward sewer plan

It's in the hands of the voters now. Sewer commission chairman Charles DeSantis has made his last arguments and it's up to Cohasset residents to decide whether they will follow that advice.

It's been a battle all along, and there are opponents as well as supporters of the plan. Confusion circles this issue which for many years has been a hot topic of debate.

DeSantis and his fellow commission members made their final appearance before the advisory board Tuesday night. That board will decide tonight whether to endorse the wastewater management plan recommended by Ward Engineering.

The proposed plan calls for a connection to the underutilized Hull wastewater treatment plant, expansion of the present central sewer area to specific problem neighborhoods, and the repair of about 370 failing septic systems, with a long-range plan to repair approximately 13 on-site systems that will fail each year.

Even the sewer commission is not solidly behind the proposal. Member Joseph Gwinn has created a revised set of numbers in which he concludes that the previously-approved Metcalf and Eddy plan is indeed the cheaper alternative.

DeSantis and commissioner Ted Guild disagreed with his computations, and noted that the Ward project is a more equitable solution that encompasses the entire town.

The main incentive to support the long-awaited Ward project is to show the government that Cohasset is indeed serious about solving its wastewater problems, DeSantis said.

Warrant article 48 is the big draw at town meeting next week, requesting $1.090,000 in appropriations for the design and construction of the project. By endorsing the article and appropriating the money, Cohasset will be solving its wastewater discharge permit violation, the primary motive in pursuing this solution, he explained.

Funding of the project is a question for many townspeople, including several advisory board members. DeSantis explained that the $1.091,095 is Cohasset's share of the total $8.6 million plan. Part of the project calls for $2.6 million for the construction of effluent collector sewers. Although the state has said it will only reimburse the town at 50 percent, DeSantis said that decision may be appealed to the federal Environmental Protection Agency (EPA). He feels the government will pay 94 percent of the collector sewers.

"If we don't get the 94 percent, I would recommend we extend the sewer area to the bare minimum," he said.

Clerical error responsible for ballot mishap

According to Town Counsel Richard Henderson, who attended the May 2 election recount, the confusion of Cohasset's first-time recount led to the misplacement of two ballots.

The two ballots were not tampered with, nor did the disappear, he said this week, "they were simply misplaced during the confusion of that very long night."

Henderson noted that the two protested ballots, which were temporarily missing from an envelope later impounded by Dedham Superior Court, were never put in the correct place.

He explained the complicated recount process resulted in the misplacement of the ballots.

The attorney said all the ballots from the April 14 election were broken into blocks of fifty. They were then divided into precincts and each counting table received a block of ballots.

If there was a question about any ballot, a counter from the table would request help from a registrar. The registrar would bring the ballot to the attorneys; Bill McDermott, representing Doris Golden; Richard Mastrangelo representing MaryJane McArthur; and Henderson, representing the Cohasset Board of Registrars.

The attorneys would present arguments as to whom the vote was cast, and the registrars would make the determination.

If an attorney contested their decision, the ballot would be marked protested, the precinct and block number would be indicated, and the name of which candidate the ballot was counted was written on the envelope.

The usual procedure was for a registrar to put the protested ballot in a special envelope. All ballots not protested were brought back to the counting table and counted as a vote.

What occurred that night, Henderson said, was that the final procedural step was not completed with two of the ballots, and instead of being placed with the other protested ballots, they were brought back to the counting tables and stored with the remaining ballots.

It was an inadvertent mistake that no one who attended the proceedings noticed at the time, he added.

"I never saw anyone count those protested ballots at the end of the night to make sure there were fifteen

Cohasset Plaza delayed, not dead

By Jane Lane

It will be a couple of weeks before any new plans are submitted, but developer Donald Staszko will definitely be presenting a revised edition of the proposed Cohasset Plaza.

Although the Cohasset Zoning Board of Appeals dealt a blow last week to the plans to build a shopping plaza at the corner of Sohier Street and Chief Justice Cushing Highway, the developer will not disband his proposal. Engineers E.J. Flynn and Co. are busy making revisions to the plaza plans - this time with the required number of parking spaces as ordered by the board of appeals.

Attorney Charles Humphreys, representing the Cohasset developer, said Staszko is determined to construct a shopping plaza on what he termed, "one of the last pieces of commercial property on Route 3A from Hingham to Marshfield."

It is the value of that parcel of land that encourages Staszko to continue with the project, despite continual

Registrar disqualified

Board of Registrar chairman Burtram Pratt, a longtime friend and supporter of selectman Mary Jane McArthur, will not participate in the June 30 special election.

In a statement issued this week by the registrars to "clarify matters which have been misconstrued," the members noted that it is Pratt's determination to disqualify himself from the special runoff election.

Although Town Counsel Richard Henderson ruled that Pratt could legally participate in the election, he added, "I have recommended and he (Pratt) has agreed to disqualify himself from performing any of those responsibilities on the date of the special election."

The registrars noted that Pratt's temporary replacement during the May recount, Raymond Buckley, was named by Superior Court Judge Robert Hallisey as one of the registrars ordered to conduct a special runoff election.

"In view of this unusual decree the Chairman will not perform any of the duties of a Registrar on the day of the runoff election. He will not enter the polling place, except to cast his own ballot, during the voting hours, or during the counting period."

Eliopolous resigns

Health Agent Elaine Eliopolous offered her resignation to the Board of Health. She will be attending law school fulltime this fall.

Employed by the town for the past two years, Eliopolous has been a central character in several confrontations during that time. She has agressively pursued health code violations, including septic-system failures, and problems with both the town landfill and Cohasset Heights landfill operations.

Last year Eliopolous was pitted against landfill supervisor Joseph Laugelle, stating he was not properly performing his duties. Litigation against the owners of Cohasset Heights has been filed by the town for certain alleged health violations.

Eliopolous will study environmental law at either Suffolk or Northeastern University. She holds a master's degree in public health from Yale University.

She plans to move in mid-July from Cohasset to Boston where she will study fulltime. It was her work here, and her previous position as director of public health in Dracut, that motivated Eliopolous to pursue a possible combination degree in environmental law and public health.

Stool snatcher apprehended

About a month ago, the Historical Society issued an earnest, if somewhat whimsical plea, to locate the whereabouts of a stool mistakenly sold at its flea market.

President Connie Parker related the tale as to how this treasured Hagerty stool, owned by a volunteer at the event who suffered from a chronic leg problem, was sold and transported from the flea market. The woman was in a quandry, having owned the precious possession for ten years, and realizing it is no longer manufactured.

But Connie has some good news for us this week. The stool was found and is back in the cautious hands of its former owner.

It seems a woman who read the Mariner report, related the story to her friend, who abrubtly interrupted her by saying, "stop laughing so hard. I'm the one who bought the stool."

How to get it back to its distraught owner was the larger puzzle in this mystery. The new owner, who purchased the stool for $7.50 that day, was ashamed to publically confess her innocent deed. So her neighbor, (the one who read the Mariner) called Connie and offered to retrieve the stool.

Connie was overjoyed, and after several attempts were made to meet the woman, she decided to go there herself and get it.

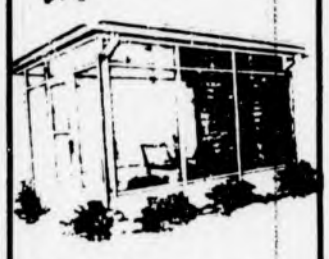
Connie, ever so politely, presented the friend with a check paid out to the other owner, and swiped the stool. The longtime owner is back with her beloved furniture. Ever grateful, she supplied the Mariner reader with a plant, delivered with a card inscribed 'to a friend.' The former owner was another recipient of a plant.

Connie was brimming with satisfaction that another puzzle was solved, complete with a happy ending. Now the only mystery remaining in her life is the Mariner's house tour contest. That doesn't seem to have an ending.

Occupancy permits

At its June 6 meeting, the Board of Selectmen voted to establish the requirement for Occupancy Permits before any building is occupied. The fee for Occupancy Permits will be $10, effective immediately, according to the State Building Code Section 119.1

Planning board notice



The Cohasset Planning Board will hold a public hearing Wednesday, June 20, at 7:45 p.m. on the following site plan review: enlargement of Log and Line Restaurant, Unit 7, Depot Square Condominium, 107 Ripley Road, submitted by Panos C. and Judith A. Kulturides, Trustees of Roundhouse Realty Trust. Plans and copy of the application may be inspected at the Town Clerk's Office.

Correction

In the Mariner's report of the June 4 school committee meeting, it was noted that a new science text was adopted for the elementary grades. It is not entitled Health Science, as reported. The correct title is Heath Science publications.

The report also stated that the text avoids the subject of evolution and Darwin's theories, which members felt were of little interest to children in elementary school. It should have been stated that school committee members voted for adoption of this text as long as the elementary science curriculum committee write a brief explanation for fifth and sixth graders of evolution and the importance of Darwin's theory.

Plaza plans will not die

rebuffs from municipal committees, Humphreys said.

The heart of zoning board's disapproval last week centered on the insufficent number of parking spaces as required by town bylaw. According to town regulations, there must be 10 parking spaces for every 1000 square feet of floor space. Staszko's proposal would have a maximum of 506 spaces when 844 would have been required for the 84,000 square feet of space.

Plans are currently being revised, taking the parking space requirement into consideration. Humphreys said the new plan will have the allowable number of spaces, whether that entails scaling down the shopping plaza, or constructing a parking garage, or a combination of the two.

The Cohasset attorney has been blunt in his criticism of the town boards which have reviewed the project. According to Humphreys, the zoning board of appeals has used the parking spaces to control the size of the building.

But that has not deterred the developer who insists the land will be developed into a shopping plaza. Plans initially called for a 55,000 square foot 'super' supermarket, a bank, a drug store, and several smaller shops.

"This town thinks that if they make things difficult enough, it will restrict development," Humphreys said. "We're being forced to spend a lot of money for no municipal purpose. There is no rationale for that number of parking spaces. We're being forced to create more blacktop and parking spaces in excess of our needs. That's unfortunate."

The attorney said traffic engineers had performed several traffic counts at various similar-sized stores to determine what parking demands would be placed on the project. All results indicated the greatest volume of cars entering such a plaza would not exceed 300. "Why create all these spaces when the greatest number of people parking at one time is not more than 300?" he asked.

Although the developer has the option to challenge the appeals board's decision, Humphreys said they will attempt an engineering solution before litigation. His client is "determined to build" the plaza, he emphasized.

A time limit had been tentatively established for a summer construction start, but that may have to be postponed while engineering plans are being revised.

In the meantime, a continuation of a site plan review by the Cohasset Planning Board will probably be withdrawn until revisions are complete, Humphreys said. The conservation commission has finished their review of the plans, adding several requirements to the project which is partially situated on wetlands.

"Cohasset is a classic example of a town that won't allow anyone in. They're so concerned that this plaza will draw people here from other towns. That's something they don't want," the attorney added.

Ballot mishap

ballots. No one compared the number of ballots in that envelope to the list written on the outside of the envelope," Henderson added.

Even after the completion of the recount, Henderson said, no one requested to count the ballots to see if the number matched the listings on the front of the envelope.

A simple human error committed amidst the confusing events of the evening, resulted in two contested ballots being omitted from the proper envelope, he added.

The envelope was later transported to Superior Court by Henderson and Police Chief Joseph Kealey. It wasn't until three attorneys, Henderson, McDermott, and John Mason, co-counsel for McArthur, gathered for an inspection of the ballots two weeks ago that two were known to be missing.

After that discovery, Town Clerk Frances Marks found them June 4 among the uncontested ballots. Both cards, counted as votes for McArthur, had been stamped protested.

The three attorneys agreed to a new election runoff, although charges of 'misfeasance' during the election and recount have been leveled by McDermott against the Board of Registrars.

McDermott, representing candidate Golden, has asked the Secretary of State's office to review the charges he had previously brought before the Superior Court, and to oversee the June 30 special election.

Change predicted for Wang Center

By Patricia Desmond

Sitting behind his desk high over Boston's Park Square, Walter Pierce looks more like a conductor than an impresario.

Not that I'm sure what an impresario is supposed to look like. My imagination would have him looking very continental — perhaps a silk square peeking out of a suit breast pocket.

But Pierce, a Hingham resident for the past 20 years, dresses with conservative good taste. His style looks as if it could blend easily into the audience at one of the concerts in the Boston University Celebrity Series — the series he has nutured for 25 years — the series that is ending to make way for the new Wang Celebrity Series.

As it's described, the change won't be dramatic. The key difference seems to be the new name to accompany the new sponsoring agency.

And with that change comes a bigger one for the impresario. Together with charge of the Wang Celebrity Series and Walter Pierce Presents concerts, he is also the newly-appointed executive director of the Wang Center for the Performing Arts.

For a man already working seven days a week, the added work would seem more than a small challenge.

"My wife, Betty Ann, is going to take over more here," he says in a matter-of-fact tone.

Pierce want't always headed toward classical music and dance.

Time was — back in the 50's — when he worked summers at the South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset. In those days the summer tent at the music circus held its own stock company. Musicals were offered in place of the current more Las Vegas-like show.

He can remember Conrad Bain being in the stock one summer.

Pierce thinks that sort of musical would bring in crowds today "but you need major stars to sell the tickets."

He worked at the music circus for five summers and than met the late Aaron Richmond who at that time was running the BU Series. Pierce became Richmond's assistant in 1956. In 1965 he became managing director of the series. The series itself began 47 years ago.

Did he hope to become a leader in the Boston music world while he was a student at Boston University?

"Things happen in many ways," Pierce answers. "Sometimes you'll try something and see how it goes."

"I knew I wanted to work in show business . . . "

Pierce, who was born in Cambridge, decided that he and his wife would try living in Hingham when they were expecting their first child because of the time he'd spent in Cohasset during summers.

"I liked the South Shore," he explains. Their first home was in Liberty Pole. About a dozen years ago, the Pierces had a home build on Bucket Mill Lane.

The Pierces have two daughters, Melinda and Susannah. This year the elder graduates from Phillips Academy in Andover. The younger is at Plymouth River School. Next year the elder will go to Bowdoin.

"She went to Hingham schools until two years ago", Pierce adds.

Do his children go to the series events?

"They like the dance," he says and then recounts a time when he brought the Bolshoi Ballet to Boston.

"We had my younger daughter backstage in a bassinette and they were all making a lot of it. They didn't have that kind of portable thing in Russia," he smiles.

How hard is it to deal with the problems that crop up in handling major events and musical geniuses?

"There are problems — like costumes or instruments arriving late or snow. But when you're dealing with the high calibre sort of person who performs in the series, you're dealing with someone who is extremely professional and concerned with artistry."

Walter Price

Among the new problems Pierce will face is needed construction work on the Wang Center.

"I won't be using a hammer and saw," he says. "But yes, I'll be in charge of the construction there as well as everything else."

He is planning to move his office closer to the Wang Center sometime around the first of the year. But he doubts his office will actually be located at the Wang Center.

"The Wang Center isn't really set up for office space," he says.

The subscription sales to the new series is already moving well.

"It grows every year," he comments.

The brochure for the new series offers the Rotterdam Philharmonic Orchestra, the London Philharmonic Orchestra, the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra conducted by Yehudi Menuhin, the Berlin Radio Symphony Orchestra, Rudolph Serkin, Isaac Stern, the Vienna Choir Boys, Mummenschantz, Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater, Carlos Montoya, Marcel Marceau, Dave Brubeck Quartet, Preservation Hall Jazz Band, Julliard String Quartet, Dame Kiri Te Kanawa, Emmanuel Ax and Yo-Yo Ma, Jean Pierre Rampal, Russell Sherman, Leontyne Price, Pilobolus Dance Theatre, Peter Serkin and more.

(To get your own brochure, call 482-2595).

One of the surprises is that the Wang Series does not play exclusively at the Wang Center. Just as the BU Series had events at Jordan Hall, Symphony Hall, John Hancock Hall and the Colonial Theatre, so too, does the new Wang Series.

Pierce explains that the events are scheduled in suitable places. The orchestras perform at Symphony Hall, the smaller musical groups perform at Jordan Hall. Mime is at the Colonial.

Alvin Ailey, however, will perform at the Wang Center "because that is suitable," Pierce says.

An Important Message from The Board of Sewer Commissioners Concerning the Sewer Article at Town Meeting, Monday Evening, June 18, 1984.

At approximately 9 p.m., Monday evening, The Board of Sewer Commissioners will move to have the Sewer Article (Article No. 48) brought forward for action. If Town Meeting agrees, action will be taken on this important Article on Monday night. We urge you to attend and to arrive promptly at 7:30 p.m. so that the maximum Town business can be transacted prior to 9 p.m.

Provisions of the Sewer Article

The language of the Sewer Article (Article No. 48) is highly complex. In summary, however, Article No. 48 would implement the recommended plan of the Town's engineer, Ward Engineering Associates. The Ward Plan would:

1. Expand the sewer service area. Refer to the list below covering streets and parts of streets to be serviced.
2. Convert the Elm Street Sewer Plant to a collection point and pumping station.
3. Provide a force main sewer line from pumping station to Hull running down the old railroad bed, across the Golf Course and down Hull Street to the Hull Town Line.
4. Provide for approximately 337 repairs of on-site systems throughout the Town where needed.
5. The Ward Plan also provides for a future on-site correction program to fix problems that occur after the engineers have completed the project.

Article No. 48 would also rescind previous Town Meeting borrowing authorizations for other sewer plans.

Expanded Sewer Service Area

The following streets and parts of streets will be incorporated into the expanded sewer service area:

Arrowwood Road
Ash Street
Atlantic Avenue, from Margin Street to #31
Bailey Road
Bancroft Road

Bayberry Lane
Border Street, from existing sewer to #119, with line to Town Wharf area and Cohasset Colonials.

What the Sewer Article Will Accomplish

The Sewer Article Will Assure:

1. Correction of our sewer plant discharge permit violations and, therefore, the end of threats of fines of $2,000.00 per day by the Commonwealth.
2. A waste water disposal and management plan that covers the entire Town, not just a small portion of the Town.
3. A plan that the Town can afford and can live with.
4. Minimum environmental impact. No in-town sewer plant or ocean outfall.
5. The end of the hassle , headaches, and high cost of operating our own sewage treatment plant.

Cost Information

Cost information including costs for property owners is available on a one page summary sheet at the Sewer Commission Office at 43 Elm Street.

These sheets will also be distributed at Town Meeting.

Ward Engineering Associates Report

Copies of the Ward Report are available at:

1. The Paul Pratt Memorial Library.
2. The Town Clerk's Office.

ATTEND TOWN MEETING!

The Board of Sewer Commissioners urges you to attend Town Meeting on Monday evening, June 18, 1984, at 7:30 p.m. We suggest that you bring this information sheet with you to the Town Meeting.

Charles DeSantis, Chairman for the Cohasset Board of Sewer Commissioners

Ward plan detailed

There is no question the state and federal government will fund on-site repairs, a situation which is not debatable, he noted.

There will also be an intramunicipal agreement developed with Hull to use the wastewater treatment plant there. Cohasset will be allowed a daily maximum useage of 300,000 gallons. Taking into account all future sewered areas, some people, including water commissioner Lot Bates, have argued that it will restrict the future development of the town.

DeSantis countered that the areas that will be sewered are already the most densely-developed neighborhoods of Cohasset. Future growth there is almost impossible, and the excess allowed the town in the Hull plant will take into account a reasonable growth factor elsewhere, he added.

There has also been concern from the businesses along Route 3A, that they will not be sewered. This plan leaves them no resources for future business expansion there, they argued. DeSantis, who met with the businessmen Tuesday night prior to the advisory session, said the businesses have not been forgotten. They will be among the highest priority in the on-site repairs. But the federal money used to complete the on-site septic repairs will prohibit the private businesses to expand the systems for future business growth, he explained.

The intramunicipal agreement with Hull will be negotiable every five years. Penalities or severance of the agreement will only be enacted if Cohasset exceeds the 300,000 gallon limit, or discharges industrial wastes into the plant, DeSantis said.

The sewer commissioner explained that if this article does not meet the town's approval, there are also three or four other alternatives recommended in the Ward report, all preferable to the previous Metcalf and Eddy plan.

DeSantis also noted that the 18-member sewer advisory committee endorsed (with some exceptions) the Ward Engineering alternative. (see committee's report elsewhere in the Mariner).

When asked why the Gwinn plan had not been more fully explored and discussed, DeSantis said, "what he is proposing is all hypothetical. It is muddying the issue. I have the consensus of a plan that is recognized as affordable. Now is the time to develop this idea, not to start a new plan."

The commissioner added that if the plan is adopted, it will take 30 months to complete construction of the project.

Waste water plant 'is a gamble'

It's the Board of Health's opinion that the proposed wastewater management plan to be presented before the special town meeting next week "is a gamble."

At a workshop session of the board Monday night, member Barbara Kern said, "it's my responsibility to tell the town that this is a gamble - that the Board of Health can't guarantee (the proposed Ward Engineering plan) will solve all their problems. I think the townspeople assume this."

Health Agent Elaine Eliopolous agreed with Kern's statement, and added "people think their (failing) systems will be fixed and there won't be any more problems."

It's Kern's personal philosophy that the entire town should eventually be sewered, given the specific geography and topography of the land. Although chairman C. Michael Bliss agreed the Ward plan is a gamble, he disagreed with the idea of sewering the entire town; a proposal which has not been included in either the Ward plan or the previously-approved Metcalf and Eddy study.

Their concern centered on the number of failing septic systems in town, which are not proposed for sewering under the Ward plan. Dr. Bliss suggested that solutions may be found by engineers at each specific site.

But Eliopolous countered that "a lot of engineers don't want to go to Cohasset. There's a sense of hopelessness - there's a big risk to do repairs. A lot (of engineers) don't guarantee their work (in Cohasset)."

Kern noted, "It's my personal opinion that in Cohasset, the only reasonable solution is to sewer the entire town. We can't control growth by controlling sewer systems. And I think to protect the public health and environment, we should start now a 20 or 30 year plan to sewer the town. There's nothing to preclude, that we couldn't sewer the entire town."

After reviewing a street listing of the 31 septic systems in town that are presently known to be failing, board members found that only one-sixth of them will be sewered under the Ward plan, and only one-third will be included in the first phase of the Metcalf and Eddy proposal.

The Ward plan, which will be presented to the town at next week's special town meeting, seeks to repair about 370 septic systems throughout the town. Kern and Eliopolous are concerned that people assume once their failing systems are fixed, there will be no problems in the future. That is not necessarily the case, considering the topography and high water table in various sections throughout town, they said.

The two board members and the health agent agreed the Ward proposal is a gamble; that innovative and alternative systems have never been explained by the Ward engineers; and that repairs of failing septic system have traditionally been accomplished every couple of years, and the pattern will likely not change under the proposed Ward plan.

Board of health articles reviewed

Tuesday night, the advisory board reviewed the warrant articles proposed by the Board of Health.

At the health board's meeting Monday night, the members decided to withdraw an article to store diesel fuel at the Cedar Street landfill. On the advice of landfill supervisor Joseph Laugelle, the health board members decided that storing the diesel fuel for the landfill machinery is not more cost-effective than the present system of delivering the fuel every two weeks. The danger of a spill is also heightened with a storage facility, the members noted.

Article 44A was also withdrawn from the warrant in favor of the following article, 44B, which requests $20,000 a year to lease a front end loader for the landfill for the next five years.

This machine, according to Laugelle, will be used to transport the trash bins at the entrance of the landfill to the actual dump site.

But an added feature which health board members would like included in the bid specifications would be an extra $6000 for special foam tires. If those tires were included with the machine, it could be used for compaction and covering work done by the tracks-cavator at the landfill.

When the advisory board reviewed this request Tuesday night, they asked several questions about the lease arrangement. Laugelle said at least two manufacturing companies assured him that if the town was not satisfied with the front end loader, it could return the machine without penalty. The transport-loader can be purchased for $1 at the end of the five years lease arrangement.

Advisory board members were anxious to see this guarantee in writing before they form an opinion. Laugelle was scheduled to return to the board with the written statement Thursday night.

The supervisor explained that the present landfill machine is 13 years old and is expected to cost the town about $20,000 in repairs this year. This new type of front end loader will be capable of transporting the trash bins to the landfill site, compacting the trash there and covering it as required by law. This is a valuable asset, he said, in case the present landfill trackscavator is out of operation.

Article 45 in the warrant requests $1500 for a three-sided 25 feet by 16 feet structure added onto the present landfill office, which will house the new front end loader. The board proposed this article to protect the town's investment in the truck, and to protect the machine during inclement weather. Laugelle said there is a lot of vandalism at the landfill, and this structure would eliminate problems with the new machine.

The Board of Health has also submitted a request for $126 to pay the relocation costs of a family removed from a condemned property. Although the legal responsibility for this fee should rest on the landowner, the legal costs of the town pursuing that solution is not cost-effective, the board agreed.

A call to attend town meeting

Letter

To the Editor:

Town government is not automatic or self-guided, nor is it a perpetual motion machine. All of its impetus and most of its direction come from Town Meeting. Only by Town Meeting action can funds be raised and appropriated, pay adjusted, new projects approved, bylaws updated, and direction and public support given to Town officials.

Unfinished business obliges the Town officials to do the best they can with old rules and precepts in facing new and often perplexing situations.

Town meeting action is that of a collection of individuals, many of whom show up only from a sense of duty. Decisions are oft times based on what is heard there, which is the way a lot of us make decisions. This is the way of democracy, the rule of the non-expert, and Town Meeting is quintessential democracy, and the rule of the non-expert. But it works—when we take part, and it surely beats government by default.

See you at Town Meeting.

That's on Monday, June 18, 1984, at 7:30 p.m. in the Cohasset High School auditorium.

You might not call it entertainment, but you could deem it worthwhile.

We're so lucky

Just look at this town. Even in the midst of a simmering heatwave, it's beautiful.

Why are we so blessed?

So it gets a little hot in Cohasset. We travel right down to some of the best beach area along the East coast. Or we go for a sail in one of the most picturesque harbors in the country. Or, some of us, admittedly young and most often from other towns, adventure to Mill Bridge for a jump or two. Dangerous, but you have to admit, they have good taste - jumping from Cohasset rather than Neponset Bridge.

Why are we so fortunate?

At the end of a long day's work, we struggle out of that hot car, depart from that bus, train, boat or plane, and praise heaven. We're home, the best home in the world.

As you drive past East Boston tenements from Logan, or as the Red Line rattles by three-deckers at the Ashmont station, we silently thank God for our blessings.

And we wonder, why?

We have worked hard to support our families, to bring them to this town where the schools are small and education is important. We love the quaintness of this extraordinarily beautiful community.

Don't let it end there.

We have to work harder. We sweated and and strived to live here. We can't give up now. This town needs us as much as we depend upon its sanctuary.

We're all different, with different opinions, loyalities and goals in life. That's okay. That's even good. But we have to take that next step and voice our opinions, help set the standards that create the greatness of Cohasset.

No one here is campaigning for dictator. It will take our vote at town meeting next week to decide whether to spend our money on a new landfill machine, improve the Government Island pier, or purchase a new sewer system for $1.1 million.

Don't force your neighbor to make those decisions for you. It's difficult, but certainly not impossible to rise from that beautiful home and travel to the high school for a couple of hours.

Do it because you love this town; you want your kids to have the best. And because you owe something back to this place you so proudly proclaim as home. All great things take effort.

Let's not degrade ourselves into allowing a few to make the choices of many.

Happy
Father's Day

My dad was always there

By Claire McDonough

When I was a child it was always easy to buy a gift for my father. I used to agonize over my mother's presents, anxious to select the right size, the right color, something she would really love.

Dad, on the other hand, was known to love just about anything.

For Dad, any gift was the occasion for rejoicing. He never tore the wrapping off like the rest of us did. He'd shake and squeeze the package, speculating wildly as to what might be inside.

A two inch square box would be suspected of holding "A rhinocerous! Just what I've always wanted!"

I'd giggle, and beg him to hurry, squirming with delicious anticipation of his delighted expression at receiving his 27th necktie or 18th shaving mug.

He, however, would prolong the moment.

He'd reread the "homemade" verse taped to the outside, a verse that poked gentle fun at one of his foibles. There was never any worry about hurting Dad's feelings. He accepted my gifts and my verses as he accepted everything else about me. I was free to reach, to explore, to become.

If I overstepped, he would tell me so. He would never let me go too far, hurt myself too much. But he would never reject me. An idea of mine might be unacceptable, but Dad could always find a noble, altruistic reason for my thoughts or actions.

I guess that's what I valued most about him — while never fully aware of how much I did value him. He was always there. I never had to worry about his feelings, his judgments, his rejection of me.

Some of my friends in St. Mark's School were afraid of hell — afraid of God. I never was. After all, the nuns had told us that God loves us because He is our Father. I knew there was nothing to fear in a Father's love.

Last week I heard my kids talking about Father's Day. There was a good deal of giggling going on. They remembered the time they gave him a coffee maker and he pretended he didn't know what it was.

They remembered some of the gifts they gave him over the years — ashtrays made lovingly for a father who was trying to stop smoking; candle holders that would hold candles if you propped them up just right; dayglo colored pictures of vegetables; clothes that were too small for his expanding body.

"Dad always acted as if he really loved them," one of the kids observed. "Every present we ever gave him seemed to be just what he always wanted."

"I know," said another. "He's always been so dependable. He wore the neckties that glowed in the dark. And he showed the corny things we wrote on his cards to all his friends, like they were something by Ernest Hemingway."

They poured over the ads in the Sunday supplement. Their gift for Dad had to be absolutely perfect. It had to express their love and their gratitude.

"He's always there," one of them explained. "You always know you can go to him with anything. He might get mad, but he'll always help."

"Tell him so," I suggested. "It's the best present you could give him.

"I wish," I added, "that I had told my father."

Registrars clarify election issue

Letter

To the Editor:

This is to clarify matters which have been misconstrued concerning the conduct of this office.

The Chairman of the Board, in a letter to the Board of Selectmen, dated April 18, 1984, disqualified himself from participation in a forthcoming recount of ballots for the office of Selectmen in the April 14 Town Election.

On April 26 the Selectmen appointed Raymond Buckley as a temporary Registrar to act in place of the Chairman during the recount, his duties to end with the completion of the recount. Mr. Buckley was sworn in as a temporary Registrar on May 2 and performed the duties of the office on that date.

The Chairman of the Board of Registrars has continued to act in all other matters, including registration of new voters, certification of nomination papers for State and National offices, and other duties of the board. He will continue to perform all of these duties as a duly appointed member and Chairman of this board, with one exception.

In an appeal to Superior Court of the results of the recount, the temporary Registrar, Mr. Buckley, was named as a defendant. In an order dated June 4, 1984, signed by Justice Hallisey, Mr. Buckley is named as one of the Registrars who are ordered to conduct a special runoff election, on or before June 30, 1984.

In view of this unusual decree the Chairman will not perform any of the duties of a Registrar on the day of the runoff election. He will not enter the polling place, except to cast his own ballot, during the voting hours, or during the counting period.

It is stressed that in all matters, except as stated above, the Chairman of this board will continue to perform his duties, as prescribed by law.

Board of Registrars,
Alice G. Daunt

It is done. Mystery House winners announced

By Mike Berger

Congratulations to the Galt Grant family and Warren Pratt for tying for first place as they correctly guessed 27 King Street.

The second place winner is A.J. Antoine Jr. and tying for third place were Betty Enders and Lillian Pierce.

The first place winners will each receive a $100 certificate at the Linen Chest, the second place winner will receive a $50 certificate at Hugo's and the third place winners will receive a $25 certificate at Fleming's of Cohasset.

Anyone who has followed the 14-week Mystery House is probably wondering what happened to Bob Leonard Sr.?

Beneath this article one will read his letter of withdrawal which is dated May 26. I purposely held the letter to this publication to give Mr. Leonard a chance to reconsider his decision.

He has a right to his opinion and he is right to point out that a newspaper should stand behind what it writes.

However to summarize our point of view: As one will read later on, other Mariner newspapers had similiar Mystery House contests. Based on their experiences, we first disqualified Cohasset Historical Society members. Then we learned the society's membership is over 500 members.

Yes we wrote, the first week correct answers would be used if a playoff was needed.

However and this is a very important however, Warren Pratt, did not enter the first week and we later learned he is a historical society member.

True, we went back on our word but in the interest of fair play, Warren Pratt should not be disqualified from first place because of the first week's rules.

Therefore with the consultation of the Historical Society, we decided the fairest way to end the contest was to extend it another two weeks.

Bob Leonard probably would have won had he decided to enter the final weeks. He chose not to and that is his decision.

Second, to run this kind of contest needs the coordination of the photographer, editor, production workers, the pressmen, David Wadsworth of the Historical Society and the companies which donated the prizes.

We appreciate the work of Wadsworth who faithfully every week searched the archives for the photographs. None of the mistakes which were made were his or the society's If there is any blame, I as former editor will take it.

But after long thought and consideration, I believe extending the contest was the fairest thing to do and I will stand by it.

The final standings are the Galt Grant family and Warren Pratt, nine correct answers, A.J. Antoine Jr., eight, Betty Enders and Lillian Pierce, seven, Verna Martini, six, Hamilton Tewksbury, five, Charles Wheelright, Jean Rosano and Lynette Lyndan, four and Mary Fleming, three correct answers.

Although he withdrew, Bob Leonard Sr. finished with eight correct answers.

We hope those who entered had fun and learned something about the town's history.

Last week's Mystery House was 27 King St. which was built probably around 1727 by Joshua Burr. The house later was owned by members of the Tower family and has been extensively "modernized." Burr was born in 1699 and was married in 1727-28 to Elizabeth Tileston of Dorchester. He was a farmer and died in 1785.

The house passed into the hands of Anselm Lothrop, then to his son-in law Abraham Tower whose wife was Marcia Lothrop.

The exact location is the west side of King Street between North Main Street and Rte 3A.

Last week's Mystery House was 27 King Street. Glad it's over? (Rose Cundari photo)

Letter

To the Editor:

I wonder how many of the subscribers and readers of the Cohasset Mariner realize the farce that is being played out under the name of the Mystery House Tour.

The scenario begins on March 1 when the first picture was printed. Generally, a contest begins with rules and contestants play by them — not so in Cohasset.

Rules were changed on the whim of whomever was in charge. Five people solved the first puzzle. I was one of these lucky people. Quote in Mariner March 8, "This means the contest must start over again, but the winners of last week will count if playoffs are needed."

I felt this was good insurance for me in case we needed a playoff for a tie. Several contestants filed late but were allowed to be counted. One picture was so poorly reproduced it was disallowed.

Originally it was supposed to be a 10 week contest. It is now May 24. We have already been involved for 12 weeks. Now I am in a tie with another person, and I presume this is where my original entry will count and the contest is now over.

Again the plot thickens, the paper announces "not so," we will have two more pictures making it 14 weeks of a 10 week contest. So much for newspaper integrity.

I wish to state in the interest of decency and fair play that I no longer want to be associated with such a poorly run contest. It was supposed to be fun and played according to rules, but as the old saying goes, "Rules were made to be broken" and nowhere has it been more evident than here. Please cancel my subscription to the Mariner and refund to me whatever is due.

Robert A.Leonard, Sr.
39 Bancroft Rd.

The Mystery House Tour began as a lark

By Judy Foley

It started as a lark, a way to fill a little space and have some fun in the waning days of winter, in our youngest sister paper, the Pembroke Mariner.

Back in February the Pembroke paper started a contest using old photographs on loan from the local historical society. Readers had to guess the location of the home, and those with the most correct answers in ten weeks would win gift certificates from local stores. They called it the "Mystery House Tour."

By Week #2 almost 30 readers were participating in the Pembroke contest. Publisher David Cutler loved it.

"It's a great idea," he said.

"We should do this in every town (the Mariner publishes seven weekly hometown newspapers now)," he suggested.

By Week #3 the contest had generated more interest in Pembroke, and the suggestion became an edict. "I want this to start in every paper. See if you can borrow old pictures from the historical societies and publish one a week. If there is a tie, we'll continue with a 'sudden death playoff.' Just don't make them too easy."

The Cohasset Mariner was the next to start a "Mystery House Tour." According to the original rules, members of the local historical society were disqualified, but the Cohasset editor discovered that over 500 residents belonged to the Cohasset Historical Society. The contest was started from the beginning again, much to the chagrin of readers who'd sent in the right answer the first time.

Next the Marshfield Mariner began scurrying the town for old photos of homes, since Marshfield does not boast an active historical society. By this time the Pembroke editors, knee-deep in entries, were wondering who thought of such an awful contest.

The Hanover Mariner found a rich supply of photos in the archives of the Hanover Historical Society. The supply was needed, since over 50 readers played the game at its peak and 11 were still tied for first place after 15 weeks of play. The prize winners were finally picked from a hat this week, with free subscriptions going to the rest of the finalists.

Now that it's over, we have to reflect on the interest and popularity our little "winter doldrums" contest generated. The editorial staff of each paper spent about six hours a week on the contest: compiling standings, tracing lost answers, correcting problems (all kinds, from computer misprints to human errors to late postal deliveries), finding photos of old homes that are still standing, and fielding phone calls from readers caught in the throes of competition.

It was a lot more work than anyone at the Mariner had predicted, but it was fun, and it certainly filled more than its share of space.

The contest has ended with congratulations to the winners, thanks to all the players and the Historical Society, and a loud sigh of relief from the beleaguered staff of the Mariner.

One avid reader now wants to know what bright and imaginative contest will follow the "Mystery House Tour." And we see David Cutler smirking to his staff, "See, I told you it was a great idea."

Cohasset Harbor Committee

At its regular June meeting the Cohasset Harbor Committee heard a proposal for scaling down the concept for improving the pier on Government Island.

In a recent letter to the Selectmen Billy Stone, a long-time Cohasset fisherman, outlined a smaller addition to the pier than the current Harbor Committee concept. Stone and Edward Figueiredo, another Cohasset fisherman, discussed the new approach with the committee and made it clear that they felt a large majority of the fishermen would support the alternative concept.

Burk Ketchum, representing the Anderson-Nichols Company, the consultants on the pier project, was also at the meeting and stated that this alternative approach would represent a considerably lower price than the original concept.

A sketch of the new proposal is currently posted in the Harbormaster's office, with a petition sheet to give Cohasset fishermen an opportunity to indicate their support by signing the petition.

All fishermen are urged to examine the sketch and sign the petition if they would support the new plan at the June 18 Town Meeting.

Citizens sewer advisory committee report

Background and Purpose:

The Citizens Sewer Advisory Committee was appointed by the Board of Sewer Commissioners during October, 1983. We were chosen because we represent a variety of neighborhoods, opinions, and experience. Some of us are liaisons with other town boards and commissions. We began meeting in November, 1983, and have held a total of 13 meetings, in addition to participating in the December 12 and February 16 public hearings. The minutes of our meetings, so capably prepared by our secretary Muriel Sylvia, with recent help from Jean Cotton, are available for reading in the Bates Building at 43 Elm St. Correspondence to and from our committee is on file as well. During the course of our work, we met seven times with one or both of the town's consultants from Ward Engineering. At least one member of the Board of Sewer Commissioners was present at most of our meetings. Members of the general public were always in attendance, either as members of invited groups or out of personal interest. The press provided intermittent coverage. All our meetings were posted, and almost all were announced in the local daily newspaper.

The purpose of the Citizens Sewer Advisory Committee is to serve as a guide to the Board of Sewer Commissioners and its engineers, Ward Engineering Associates, to ensure that the wastewater treatment and disposal plan which is evolved by Ward Engineering will meet the needs of the town and be acceptable to the residents. Our charge was limited to providing input for the Ward study and an evaluation of that study. The Federal Clean Waters Act (1972 and amendments), under the jurisdiction of the Environmental Protection Agency, recommends a vigorous public participation process during the formation of a wastewater management facilities plan, and it has been in that spirit that we have all been working for the past six months.

Ward Engineering Associates, under the guidance of the Sewer Commission, has been commissioned by the town (Town Meeting votes in 1982 and 1983) to attempt to find an alternative, less costly approach to Cohasset's wastewater treatment problems than the solution proposed by the town's previous consultants from the engineering firm of Metcalf and Eddy. The Citizens Sewer Advisory Committee early on decided that any alternative proposal would have to satisfy us on three accounts: primarily it would have to meet the public health needs of the town; it would also have to be cost-effective, and finally it would have to solve our legal problems with the state as spelled out in the 1982 Agreement for Judgment.

The Ward Plan:

Briefly, the following topics have been studied by Ward Engineering and are written up in detail in the "Public Review Draft, Supplemental Wastewater Management Facilities Plan." (Copies of this plan are available for public review in the Paul Pratt Library, in the Bates Building, and with any member of the Citizens Committee and Sewer Commission.) Topics include: public health factors such as effluent limitations to surface and ground waters; environmental factors; town government and demographic data; existing wastewater treatment systems; projections for town development and environmental impacts; explanations of some alternative wastewater disposal systems; and an evaluation of these alternatives for Cohasset.

Ward Engineering developed the following options for preliminary consideration. All options are, in their judgment, feasible considering engineering factors only.

1. Repair and upgrade the existing plant to eliminate our discharge violation; no outfall
2. As (1), but with an outfall
3. Expand the capacity of the existing plant, enlarge the boundaries of the sewer service area; no outfall
4. As (3), but with an outfall
5. Construct a new facility in Cohasset to service the current and an expanded sewer service area, with an outfall
6. Connect current and expanded sewer service area to the Hull system
7. All options, 1-6, include on-site repair and rehabilitation work in all areas of town

The conclusions and recommendations of Ward Engineering are to convert the current small wastewater treatment plant to a pumping station and connect to the Hull sewerage system. An enlarged central collection area would add some 372 systems to sewer service. Approximately 337 other sites will be repaired or rehabilitated on-site. The approximately 1,300 remaining systems (outside the sewer service area and not in need of repair) will presumably continue to function on-site in a safe and healthful fashion. Maintenance and funding for any future repairs for on-site septic systems (both those repaired under the program and all others) would be the responsibility of property owners and taxpayers, under the jurisdiction primarily of the Board of Health. An intermunicipal agreement between the towns of Cohasset and Hull would ensure the acceptance of our wastewater (and our septage), up to a 300,000 gallons per day maximum, for a period of 20 years or longer.

Conclusions:

During the course of our 13 meetings, the Citizens Committee met with groups of citizens having particular concerns about the options under study. A group of residents of the Jacobs Meadow area (wherein lies the current plant) are opposed to any expansion of our treatment facility. A group of lobstermen are opposed to continued discharge of treated effluent into Cohasset Harbor. A number of businessmen are concerned about the lack of sewer service for the Rte. 3A business area. Operators of large wastewater treatment plants spoke to us about the economies of scale involved in the operation of their plants and the viability of intermunicipal agreements. One of these is the chief operator of the Hull treatment facility. Bill Baird, Vice-Chair of our committee, did extensive research into the condition of Cohasset Harbor during various weather and seasonal conditions. A sub-committee developed a working paper on the factors to be considered during any consideration of any intermunicipal agreement with Hull.

Reflection on the opinions of the people with whom we spoke, in addition to our own understanding of the needs of the town, have led our committee to agree in substance with the recommendations of Ward Engineering. It is worth noting that in several areas, the Ward Plan incorporates our suggestions over those of the Sewer Commission. We recommended a larger sewer service area than that originally endorsed by the Commission. We also encouraged the adoption of a 300,000 gallon per day agreement with Hull, rather than a smaller amount originally envisioned by the Sewer Commission. The larger amount allows for growth and development beyond the 20 year planning period. The Board of Health will be directly involved in all on-site repair and maintenance work, as is their responsibility under Title 5 of the Massachusetts Rules and Regulations for the Disposal of Sanitary Sewage.

Citizens sewer advisory committee report

By addressing the sewage disposal needs of the entire town, either through adding connections to public sewerage collection or by repairing and maintaining all on-site systems, the Ward Plan addresses our committee's primary concern of enhancing the public health of the town. The drinking water supply (Lily Pond) is protected by extending sewer service to the entire Bear Hill area.

The Committee's requirement that the plan be financialy responsible is addressed by using cost-effectiveness as the main criterion for determining the boundaries of the expanded service area. On-site repairs are needed throughout the town and their individual costs are site-specific. However, it is possible to compare the costs of repairing systems in need in various neighborhoods with providing sewer service to the entire neighborhood. The Ward proposal is based on their professional opinion that any system is repairable on-site, if money is not a factor. The Ward recommendation to connect to Hull is also based on cost-effectiveness and their understanding of the amounts of grant money for which their various alternatives would be eligible. Whether or not an outfall would be required if repair or expansion of the Elm Street plant were chosen is a major unknown and would greatly affect the cost to the town of this option.

Other factors which affect cost-effectiveness include the following. "Buy-in" to the Hull plant to guarantee treatment of 300,000 gallons per day (approximately 10 percent of their design capacity) is less costly than expanding our current plant or constructing a new plant for that same capacity, assuming we would be required to have an outfall. Not having to construct a new facility would also save time and simplify environmental impact questions. Operation and maintenance costs per gallon decrease as design capacity and flow increase. Ward recommends effluent sewers which are less expensive for already developed areas than conventional, solids carrying sewers.

The legal questions are the most complicated, because the answers depend on actions yet to be taken by Cohasset Special Town Meeting, our Board of Selectmen, government bodies in Hull, and various state and federal agencies. It appears to our committee that the compelling argument on this question is that the state has encouraged Cohasset to pursue the "Hull connection" (see letter dated May 10, 1984, from the DEQE, Division of Water Pollution Control, Thomas McMahon, Director). We have also been told that any intermunicipal agreement between Cohasset and Hull will be co-signed by agents of the state and federal governments and the state courts. This procedure would almost assuredly guarantee the sanctity of the contract, and thus our rights and needs for the indefinite future.

Final Remarks:

A further, more general concern of our committee has been that the Ward plan offers a solution which is widely endorsed and seen as fair to all residents and taxpayers. We feel that Ward Engineering Associates has chosen the mix of solutions which is most helpful to the most people and the least likely to be devisive. All property owners are served. The town of Hull will have the responsibility for maintaining this large treatment facility and meeting all state requirements for proper and healthful service. The implementation period is relatively short (two years or less for on-site work) which will help many people who are currently experiencing septic system problems.

Recognizing that any plan has shortcomings as well as advantages and that the Ward program may not be accepted, the town needs also to realize that it is imperative that Cohasset accept responsibility for providing some adequate wastewater management plan for its property owners and taxpayers. Consideration of other alternatives studied by Ward, as well as previous plans and as yet unformulated plans would be necessary but would take time. Grant program eligibility depends on a speedy decision to set our course. We must make a decision and appropriate funds and sign agreements for design and construction so that we can proceed on our course without further delay.

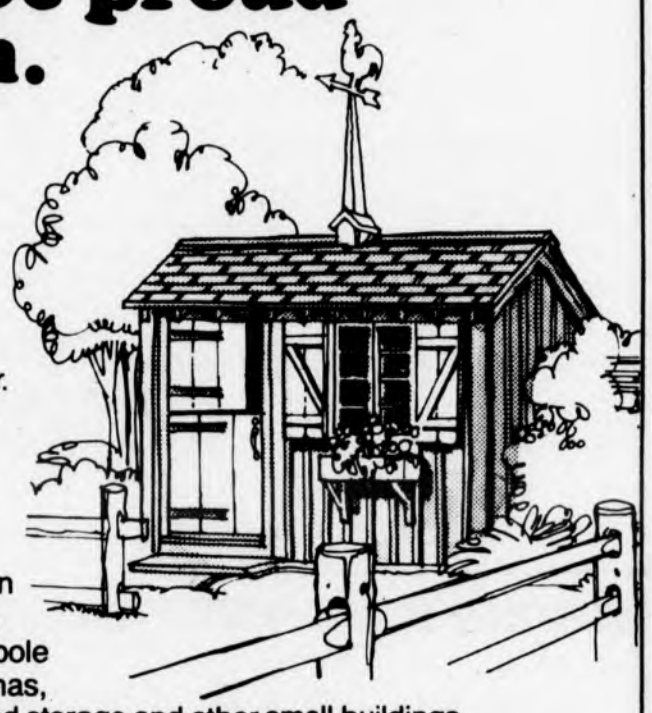
Dwyer Farm Walk-a-thon

Last week, the Massachusetts Audubon Society officially acquired Dwyer Farm, 388 acres of unique coastal farmland in Marshfield, with passing of papers at the Society's South Shore Regional Office, in Marshfield, Mass.

Audubon and the Committee to Preserve Dwyer Farm have worked for the past four years to save the fifty-year old farm from potential developers.



Once described in a Harvard University study as the most significant piece of open land left in Eastern Massachusetts, Dwyer Farm attracts over 200 species of mammals and birds including red fox, mink, muskrats and snowy egrets. "As one of the few large open farms remaining on the entire New England seacoast, it's used intensely by migratory shore birds, ducks, geese, and other wildlife. We've found over 75 species nesting on the site," said David Clapp, director of Mass. Audubon's South Shore Regional Office.

Mass. Audubon hopes to retain some portion of the land as farmland with both livestock and crops. The property will be retained as a wildlife refuge and open space for future generations.

Fundraising continues in an effort to raise the $200,000 to complete still needed to complete payment for Dwyer Farm. A Walk-a-thon to help raise funds will be held in Marshfield Saturday, June 16 beginning at 9:30 a.m. at the South Shore Regional Office.

Participants will walk to Dwyer Farm, a distance of approximately 8 miles. For more information about Dwyer Farm or the Walk-a-thon, please call the South Shore Regional Office at 837-9400.

Residents complain about annual teen hangout

Parker Avenue residents on Government Island approached selectmen June 6 with what has become an annual complaint about the use of a nearby town-owned parking lot as a late-night hangout.

A recent request by Hugo's Restaurant to lease the lot from the town is of further concern to Parker Ave. residents. "I question whether the town has a right to lease the parking lot," said Parker Ave. resident Susan Cox, who complained of loud noises waking her baby in the middle of the night.

Cox and Robert Pattison, also of Parker Ave., urged the board to hold a public hearing before it decides to lease the lot to Hugo's for parking. "(The) only solution to control that back parking lot is to put up a gate for $500 to $1000 . . . I can't understand why there hasn't been a town meeting article," harbormaster Harry Ritter told selectmen.

Selectmen, agreeing it was time to do something, reassured concerned residents a public hearing would be held within the next two weeks on the Hugo's issue.

Chairman Clifford Mitman said one reason the board has not resolved the problem, is because they are waiting for the resolution of the proposed Hugo's lease of the lot, in order to allow someone else to take over the gate and supervision expense if possible.

Selectman John DeBassio said the lease with Hugo's was still in the proposal stage and was being redrafted, so the board had no hard, fast idea about the probable arrangement with Hugo's.

DeBassio added, though, in addition to a gate, a guard house with a direct line to the police station had been suggested by Hugo's.

"You don't give exclusive right to Hugo's at the town's recreational expense," selectman Frank England told residents concerned for beachgoers using the lot during the day.

Attornery explains Litchfield's litigation against town

By Cyndee Moore

Litchfield Express Co. attorney Joseph D'Agostino, representing owner Barron Salvador, told selectmen June 6 their May 23 discussion and order requiring the owner to remove delivery trucks from town property should not have been made in open session without the company being represented.

Salvador, who has filed a civil court suit against selectmen to seek the court's annulment of the board's order, was not present at the decisive May 23 meeting because, according to D'Agostino, town counsel Richard Henderson led him to believe the issue was to be discussed in executive session between selectmen and town counsel.

"It (the company's use of town property for parking) should not have been discussed in open session without us having an opportunity to hear," D'Agostino said. "If it was going to be open to public discussion, we certainly would have wanted to be here."

"We would have liked to address those people who complained . . . like Mr. Rhodes who said trucks were starting up at 4 a.m. and said he had been bothered by this for 15 years," D'Agostino told the board.

"It is an issue of what is the appropriate use of town property," Chairman Clifford Mitman replied.

In 1974, according to the Salvadors, the selectmen agreed with a 1969 board's decision to allow the company to park its vehicles on town-owned lot 25 Bayberry Lane, which was considered not suitable for development.

Selectman John DeBassio told D'Agostino the present board's "suspension" and "not cessation" of its February 15 decision to evict Litchfield from the Bayberry Lane lot within 90 days was done to "allow time to adjust."

"Well, if the decision of this board is to keep it that way, then we will have to make adjustments," D'Agostino said.

Calling the board's decision a "vendetta," resident Dick Conley reminded selectmen, "once the town got involved in a suit which cost $40,000. I hate for you to go to town meeting and ask for $35,000 for legal fees."

Chairman Mitman, who sees Litchfield's use of the Bayberry Lane lot as "non-conforming" according to town bylaws, told Conley, "I can't possibly see this happening because the issue is simple."

Gardeners meeting

The Amateur Gardeners of Cohasset will hold their next meeting June 26. They will meet at the Town Hall parking lot at 9:30 a.m. for a carpool. They will then go to the Adam's Mansion in Quincy to view the house and gardens, after which they will enjoy luncheon at the Quincy Neighborhood Club.

Though few would admit it, fathers can be just as sentimental when their day rolls around, fast on the heels of Mother's Day. This coming Sunday should be a time for pampering the man who does more than just bring home the bacon. A hurried stop to pick up the ritual necktie, or an overpriced meal in anovercrowded restaurant is hardly payment in kind for all he has done to enrich your life. So, it's up to us to show our appreciation for hurts soothed, tears dried and hours of joy only Father can provide. In return, just for a day, turn off the alarm, throw cholesterol count to the wind and surprise the dear man with a breakfast treat. Maryann Troy's rolls would tempt anyone.

QUICKIE PECAN ROLLS

2 c. Bisquick
2/3 c. milk
1/2 c. melted butter
1/4 c. granulated sugar
1 tsp. cinnamon
1/2 c. brown sugar
36 pecan halves

Mix Bisquick and milk to soft dough. Turn onto flour-covered board. Knead 10 times. Roll out to 15 x 9" rectangle. Brush with 2T melted butter. Sprinkle with mixture of sugar and cinnamon. Roll as for jelly roll. Cut into 12 equal slices. Mix together brown sugar and remaining butter and put in 12 muffin cups with 3 pecan halves in each. Top with slice of dough. Bake for10 min. at 450 degrees. Invert on foil.

Hiking, swimming, fishing—just being outdoors is often the best of all worlds for some Dads. On his very special day, the whole family can pitch in, making sure that the man of the hour is relaxing under a shady tree. One way of leaving it all behind without having to drive for miles and miles is to weekend in one of our state parks. Sleeping under the stars, hiking through the woods and sitting around an open fire makes that last cup of cocoa, or toasted marsh mallow special indeed. Site officials usually require a fire permit and it's wise to carry along an old oven rack or long-handled grill basket. About an hour before mealtime is best to prepare the fire, and is the time for everyone to go into action, finding rocks to place in a circle and gathering kindling—don't use logs, they're too big for starting a fire. The flames should die down and turn the embers to a rosy glow or your charcoal briquets to a white-ash color before you start cooking this

FRYPAN BURGWICHES

1 pound ground beef
1/2 c. chopped onion
1 can tomato or vegetable soup
1 T prepared mustard
Dash pepper
Hamburger buns, split and toasted

In skillet, brown beef and cook onion (use shortening if necessary). Stir to separate meat. Pour off fat. Add soup and seasonings. Heat. Stir occasionally. Serve on buns. Makes about 3 cups.

A Sunday brunch on a sunny June morning will also give Dad a chance to show off his garden, an opportunity not to be indulged at an evening party. Bloody Mary in hand, he and his friends can wander among the petunias and vegetable patch while the fragrance of Ann Byer's casserole promises a happy meal in the offing.

BAKED EGGS

12 slices of bread, cut off crusts
8 oz. Velveeta cheese
Can of ham, cut in cubes
4 eggs
2 c. milk
2 tsp. dehydrated parsley flakes
2 tsp. minced onion
Paprika

Grease 8¼" x 12½" pan. Butter 6 slices bread and line bottom of pan. Slice cheese and place on bread. Top with diced ham. Butter six slices bread for top. Beat eggs and milk, adding parsley and onion. Pour over bread. Sprinkle with paprika. Let stand for two hours, or refrigerate overnight. Bake for one hour at 300 degrees.

Walsh announces senate democratic candidacy

Weymouth Selectman Richard R. Walsh recently announced his candidacy for the Norfolk and Plymouth state Senate District, which includes Cohasset, Duxbury, Hingham, Hull, Marshfield, Scituate, and Weymouth.

Walsh, 34, a lifelong Democrat and 30-year resident of Weymouth, will run in the party's primary in September.

"I want this job because I know what the voters of the district want and because I feel strongly that I can provide it," Walsh said. "They want leadership, they want vision, they want a problem solver — they want someone whose past performance promises a bright future."

The only way they'll get that is by electing someone who has lived here long enough to really understand the district's needs, someone who is independent and not handpicked by others, someone who is willing to make this a fulltime job."

Walsh noted the base salary for a state senator is $30,000," and that doesn't include travel pay or the fact that most members of the upper chamber receive another $7,500 as committee chairman.

Walsh, who has taught junior high social studies for 11 years in the town of Braintree, promised to quit that job and be a fulltime senator if he wins the election.

Walsh promised to run an issues-oriented campaign, and discussed his position on several public policy questions. Among them:

The Drinking Age

"I support legislation to increase the drinking age to 21. Lowering it to 18 was a tragic mistake and I think we corrected two-thirds of that mistake when we raised it back to 20. It's time now to go the extra mile and get it back where it was to begin with."

Walsh is also a proponent of alcohol education and awareness efforts. He sponsored a seminar which Weymouth selectmen sponsored earlier this year on the dangers of drunk driving and how to combat them. It was "required reading" for the town's liquor license holders, who sent more than 200 employees to hear representatives of the town, Mothers Against Drunk Driving, and others.

Transportation

"Getting from here to there is becoming more and more of a problem when here is someplace on the South Shore. I know of no other issue in greater need of a constructive remedy. Years go by, and things only get worse. We have a cantankerous draw bridge (Fore River), the dog of the MBTA's four rapid transit lines (Red Line), and two of the state's biggest parking lots (Routes 3 and 3A)."

Walsh promised if elected, to appoint a blue-ribbon panel of transportation experts during the transition period," and they would be instructed to report back with recommendations within 60 days of the beginning of the next legislative session in January. I know there are ways to alleviate our transportation problems. I just don't think we've worked hard enough."

State Spending

"It sounds like a cliche — we have to reduce government waste and bureaucracy — and it is," Walsh said. "But like many cliches, it also happens to be true. We do have to cut out the duplication and waste. We do have to spend more of our available revenues on the goods and services that directly aid their intended receipients — and less on the lower-, middle-, and upper-level managers who man the bureaucracies of state government."

Walsh said he would fight for maximum state aid to district communities because local governments are doing a much better job than the state in the direct aid vs. bureaucracy phenomenon. "It was true prior to Proposition 2 1/2, and it's even more obvious in its wake. Communities have learned how to run lean but efficiently. The state has not."

Elder services

"Our system of delivering services to senior citizens is centralized in theory but fragmented in practice," Walsh said. "If elected, I will make a district-wide senior citizens hotline a top priority. It won't be a service provider, but it will be a place where callers are told exactly what services are available for senior citizens —and where to call to inquire about them."

Casino gambling

"I oppose casino gambling in Hull or in any other town in the district. One of the best ways we can fight crime, and more traffic to boot, is to keep casino gambling out of our district."

Walsh said Hull residents need to revive the local economy, "and I think everyone recognizes that. But there are other ways to go about it." He said he would work with Hull town officials to attract "clean industry, untainted revenue, and honest jobs."

Walsh has run for four elective offices in Weymouth, and won each on his first attempt. He was elected to town meeting in 1973, to the Weymouth Library Board of Trustees in 1974, to the town's park commission in 1977, and as a selectman in 1980. He was re-elected to the board last year and has twice served as its chairman.

Walsh as a park commissioner and then as a selectman helped to bring $450,000 in state and federal funds to Weymouth. The money was used to upgrade and expand playing fields at Lovell Playground in East Weymouth.

He is also chairman of the Norfolk County Advisory Board, a trustee of the Norfolk County Hospital and former chairman of the Board of Trustees for the State Library of Massachusetts.

Walsh is married to the former Catherine Howes, a lifelong Weymouth resident and registered nurse at the Carney Hospital in Dorchester. The Walshes live on Waterford Drive in Weymouth.

A fundraiser for Weymouth Selectman Richard R. Walsh will be held Thursday, June 14 from 7:30 p.m. to midnight at the South Shore Country Club in Hingham.

Tickets are $20 and can be purchased at the door or by calling either Ann Youngclaus 337-7645 or Maureen Jenkins, 331-6982.

There will be a buffet and dancing to the music of Irv Walling. Walsh will use the donations to help finance his bid for the Norfolk-Plymouth State Senate seat.

Bible School registrations

Many churches in Hingham will be conducting Vacation Bible Schools for children entering Kindergarten through Grade 6 in the fall, during the week of July 16-20. Registration for classes at St. Paul's will be held from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m., Monday through Friday at St. Paul's Religious Education Office. Further information may be obtained by calling 749-5568.

During the same week the First Baptist Church, Congregational Church, St. John's Church, Second Parish Church, New North Congregational Church and United Methodist of Hingham and Hull will be conducting a Vacation Bible School at the Congregational Church. Registration will be held at the above church offices. Further information may be obtained by calling Janet Cerny, 749-3786.

Both Vacation Bible Schools will develop the theme, "Share the Good News." The message of God's love through the Good News will enable us to share its message, to obey Jesus' command to spread the gospel and to respond to the vital task of keeping the Christian witness alive in today's world.

Creative learning experiences and activities will help the children realize that God calls them, too, to share their faith with others.

The children will learn through varied instructional media techniques — class presentations, song, dance, skits, puppets, arts and crafts, etc. Classes will be 9 to 11:45 a.m. In true ecumenical spirit, the closing service, combining both schools, is being planned for Friday evening, July 20.

St. Anthony's Church

The next Bloodmobile will be held Monday, June 18, in memory of one of our parishioners, Kay Gibbons, who was a past chairman and a faithful volunteer for many years. In an effort to make this the best turn-out ever, a parish-wide telephone canvas will be done during the next week. If you do not receive a phone call but would liike an appointment to give blood, please call 383-9265. It is a Christian tradition to help others — share your good health with those who are critically ill. The Bloodmobile will be at the Unitarian Parish House, 2:30 to 7:15 p.m.

VISITING NURSE ASSOCIATION

Help your neighbor and yourself by working with the home care team of the Visiting Nurse Association of the South Shore and its affiliated agency, Home and Health Resources. Certified home health aides, homemakers and nursing assistants are needed immediately. Flexible hours, paid training and mileage. For interview, call Personnel, at 843-0947.

Our ethical inheritance

Rabbi Stephen Karol of Congregation Sha'aray Shalom, 1112 Main St., Hingham, will lead the Shabbat service Friday, June 1, beginning at 8 p.m. Julie Kurr, Greg Kurr, and Lisa Schwarz will participate in the service. Rabbi Karol's sermon will be: "Our Ethical Inheritance." An oneg shabbat will follow the service.

Rabbi Karol will lead a special Confirmation and Erev Shavuot Service Tuesday, June 5, beginning at 7:30 p.m. Shavuot, a harvest festival that commemorates the Jews' acceptance of God's gift of the Torah, parallels the commitment to the Jewish faith that the ten confirmation students have made. Each student will receive a Certificate and a special blessing from the Rabbi.

An oneg shabbat prepared by the confirmands' parents will follow the service. For more information, please call the Temple at 749-8103.

'God bless Mama and God bless Grandpa McKay'

By Dorothy Squier

A mariner home from the sea, Grandpa McKay attended services with his wife and family at the Congregational Church in East Boston. That was when young Mary Jane Hutchinson saw them walking to church, and eyed and set her cap for son George, Grandpa's namesake. In time they were married and that's Mama and Papa.

Grandpa had come from Edinburgh to Port Mulgrave, Nova Scotia (where his brother, Roby, ran the lighthouse). He met and married Christine McMillan, had three sons and two daughters, and eventually brought his family to East Boston. From that busy port he sailed on tall-masted ships and was gone for months at a time.

After Grandma died and Papa and Mama had moved to Cambridge, Grandpa still spent years at sea but stayed at our house between voyages. Still a tot and the youngest of six daughters, I fell in love with Grandpa because he looked like Santa Claus . . . white haired and bearded, with rosy cheeks, blue eyes that laughed and a wonderful deep voice.

"Want a biscuit, Doss?"

"Yes, please, Grandpa."

I was sitting in the family highchair, which curiously had legs that let down and turned into a rocker. Grandpa placed a saucer on the tray, lifted a pan of hot, fluffy biscuits from the oven of the black iron stove, broke one open and sprinkled water and sugar on it. He placed it before me and saluted. Fit for the gods, it was.

Mama said he was a big help to her in the kitchen, especially when she was engrossed in making dresses for us on her White sewing machine. She was sorry when he left us to go live with Aunt Stina, his daughter in Middleboro. She was a lovely lady who painted china and owned a fascinating music box with a glass top you could look through and see the brass cylinder turn and trip the notes. Her daughters attended the Conservatory of Music. She was my favorite aunt.

I suppose it was the demanding call of the sea in his blood that made Grandpa continue the voyages though he was nearing 60.

Back in port, he'd come to Cambridge to visit and regale us with stories of his travels. Upon his return from Hawaii he had all of us, my five sisters and me, sit on the floor in a ring to show us how Hawaiians ate poi, a staple in their diet . . . circling our fingers over an imaginary bowl of imaginary gook and holding it up over our uptilted mouths. He said it was white and gloppy and it tasted good. I don't know. I never had any.

Then he'd get us all scrouched down like chickens hopping along behind him singing, "Chick, chick, chickadee." And Mama would join us and hop and sing along, until we were worn out and falling over laughing.

He told us about the many strange lands he'd seen, what the people were like and their customs. It was heady fare when he was home.

He loved to sleep outdoors and took over Papa's "cozy corner" on the second floor back piazza of the three-decker we lived in. Papa had brought home yards of used striped canvas they had on the old open trolley cars from the Boston Elevated where he worked, and Mama had cut, stitched and hung them like curtains to give privacy and shelter form the rain. A comfortable cot with a table beside it and a canvas chair were the furnishings. Both Papa and Grandpa found delight in relaxing high among the elms reading the paper and smoking their pipes, or just listening to the crickets.

He went one last time to live with Aunt Stina until one day she called us and told Papa she couldn't take care of him any longer. They found the Snug Harbor Sailors Home in the Germantown area of Quincy, Grandpa had reached 70.

The Home was a large red brick building and farm where they raised vegetables, grew flowers and had their own chickens and cows. He was happy there by the sea, helping out with his expertise in the kitchen. In the next few years he failed and the end came in 1915. We all went to Quincy to attend his burial.

The cemetery is still there, of course, overlooking Snug Harbor, though the Home is gone. I went up there last Memorial Day. It's up in back of the Snug Harbor High School. Enclosed in a chain link fence at the top of a small rise rest a hundred "ancient mariners." Grandpa's grave is in the fourth row down, the one with a curved top and carved design (likely Aunt Stina's instigation and money) with his name and dates.

GEORGE ALEXANDER MCKAY
October 3, 1840 - September 8, 1915

And now I remembered Mama. Not once had I ever heard her say a word about him that wasn't high praise. He had his faults, to be sure, as we all do, but she told us that he had loved each of us dearly, and we looked up to him and were proud of him and loved him right back.

May God bless Mama and God bless Grandpa McKay.

"When I began to look for sculpture I realized the pieces, abstract or realistic, should become part of the setting — the garden, the harbor, the wind and the trees." With this concept in mind, Barbara Gurnis began her trek through artists' studios looking for the right combination for the Invitational Sculpture Show for FirstFest, the South Shore Art Center's 29th annual summer arts festival.

From her efforts as chairperson of the Invitational Sculpture Show, the grounds of the Oaks, the former Cox estate and now the corporate offices for Yankee Oil and Gas, will be transformed into a sculpture garden with the works reflecting their environment of the wind, the trees, the harbor and the salt air.

In this setting will be works by five Boston artists, William Harby, Bernadette D'Amore, Stephen Till, Melanie Zibit and Heidi Tobler. FirstFest opens with a champagne preview of festival winners and the sculpture exhibit on Friday, June 22, and continues through Sunday, June 24. Running concurrently at the Oaks will be a Pepsi Company movie "A Century Crystallized" about sculpture.

Since there is no parking at the Oaks, transportation will be provided via an authentic trolley making continuous loops between seven locations including the Cohasset Common and the Hingham T stop. A combination ticket good for most FirstFest events is needed for the sculpture exhibit.

SS Arts Center to celebrate the arts at FirstFest

Mime, puppetry, music and storytelling — all a delight to a child's imagination — will find their place in varying versions during FirstFest, an all new adaptation of the South Shore Art Center summer celebration of the visual and performing arts.

For children only — and their parents, families and friends — the performances for the young include storytelling by Judith Black, mime by Michael Cooper and a combination of puppetry, mime and music by the Underground Railway Theater, all three appearing at the Cohasset Town Hall during the three-day festival, June 22-June 24.

In celebration of the arts and the summer solistice, FirstFest brings to the Cohasset Common and satellite locations, besides its children's performances, a sparkling array of invitational exhibits, juried shows, dance performances, a jazz concert, artistic demonstrations and children's workshops. To ease traffic congestion along Cohasset's winding streets, visitors may travel on an authentic trolley. It will make a continuous loop among seven locations including the Common and the Hingham Depot.

The Boston-based Underground Railway Theater, originally from Oberlin, Ohio, where the troupe took its name from the original Underground Railway, an escape route for fugitive slaves, will perform a tale from Hopi Mythology, "The Vision of Dreaming Branch." Scheduled to be performed at 2 p.m. Sunday, June 24, the production includes in its cast a single storyteller as the narrator, puppeteer and actor and a musical accompanist playing a wide range of instruments as they weave together a tale that traces the desert adventures of an orphan Hopi girl. Her adventures take her finally to an underground cavern where she finally realizes she must unite all people in order to prevent the end of the world.

Among its repertoire of performances, the Underground Railway Theater's specialty is shadow puppetry to accompany symphonic music. Productions feature 20-foot screens reflecting brightly colored, translucent puppetry and special effects created with projections, prisms and flexible mirrors.

Have you heard a good story lately? Storyteller Judith Black brings alive the imaginative art of storytelling, using voice changes and body movement to interpret traditional and original tales. Her performance will be at 11 a.m. Saturday, June 23. In her simple skirt, leotards and stocking feet she will captivate her audience with tales that illuminate the richness of our history and culture.

Initially trained as an educator her years of public teaching gives her an insight into the imaginations of the young. Now as a storyteller, she has performed in public and private schools, on major radio and television stations and at concerts for adult audiences.

At 2 p.m. Saturday, June 23, Michael Cooper, mimist, comedian and storyteller comes to the stage of Town Hall with his program of mime. He explores with his audience the world of mime and rekindles the often forgotten art of pretending.

Cooper's mime training began with five years of study under Tony Montanaro at the Celebration Mime Theatre and continued in Paris with Etienne Decroux, recognized as the "Father of Modern Mime." Cooper, who most often teams with fellow mimist Bob Stromberg, performs throughout New England for schools, colleges, peace gatherings or any place with an audience. Cohasset audiences will remember Stromberg and Cooper for the fine performance they give in the public schools. For Cooper, returning for a FirstFest performance will give him a chance to capture once again the delight his audiences find in the world of mime and pretend.

For complete information on FirstFest, a schedule of activities and performances and ticket information for events requiring admission, contact the South Shore Art center, 103 Ripley Road, Cohasset, 383-9548. Combination tickets may be purchased and used for admittance to various events including these children's events at Town Hall.

TEA CEREMONY

An authentic Japanese tea ceremony will be performed by Reiko Andersen during FirstFest, the South Shore Art Center's 29th annual summer arts festival.

All the rituals that are part of the tea ceremony will be celebrated by Andersen at two sittings in a private Cohasset garden. Every motion she makes during such a ceremony is controlled by tradition.

The tea ceremony will be on Sunday, June 24 at 2:30 and again at 3:30. Since seating is limited, tickets will be given to the first 100 combination tickets sold.

The combination tickets are good for most of the FirstFest events taking place June 22-June 24. For further information, contact the South Shore Art Center, 383-9548.

DANCE THEATRE

Creative movement as interpreted by the Summer Dance Theatre of Cape Cod reflects the various shades of human experience.

Choreographer Heather Shepley and the Summer Dance Theatre's 20 performing dancers come to the South Shore to perform during FirstFest, the South Shore Art Center's all new summer festival celebrating the visual and performing arts. Two performances by this dance troupe are scheduled for Saturday, June 23, at noon and again at 3:30 p.m. at the Glastonbury Abbey in Hingham. Since parking is not available at the Abbey an authentic trolley will provide transportation to and from FirstFest events, making a continuous loop among seven locations including the Cohasset Common and the Hingham Depot.

From classical dance to modern theater, from serious to funny, from classical to contemporary composers — all these themes are woven together by the troupe as it performs its dances. Traditional, abstract, themetic, emotional and humorous aptly describe the choreographed dance selections.

Choreographer Heather Shepley brings to the Summer Dance Theatre her extensive background as a professional dancer. Her strength in choreographing which is evident in her work with the Summer Dance Theatre is her strong imagination. With a master's degree in dance from New York University, she has danced professionally with the Rudy Perez and Jose Limon Companies and has taught dance at a number of colleges and universities.

While attending one of the dance performances, visitors will have an opportunity to view the craft demonstrations and the invitational artisans exhibit, also at the Glastonbury Abbey from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m.

For complete FirstFest information, schedule of events and tickets, contact the South Shore Art Center, 103 Ripley Road, Cohasset, 383-9548.

'How do you do' should be warm and strong

By Lois Martin

It is the most important greeting in our society. It beats the inconsequential nod of the head and the "How ahh ya?" by a long shot.

But there have never been succinct guidelines for the handshake. And we better take care of that now. The first rule is this: never underestimate the power of your handshake.

We are judged by that grip. And if a grip is non-existent, we make a greater impression in the wrong direction than we'd like.

Okay. So you're smiling broadly as you see two people approach you. One of them is familiar; the other is a stranger. (I never said 'strange,' just someone you haven't met, but it won't hurt you to shake hands with strange people either so long as you're fast on your feet).

PATCHES

Back to protocol. You sense you are about to be introduced. Get that hand ready. No more of this foolishness about who shakes, women or men. Nowhere is it written that men shake and women nod demurely in the 80s. If it is written, see to it that it's erased.

Give that new person a straight eye-to-eye during the intro; that's almost as important as the handshake. Then on conclusion of the proper "I'd like-you-to-meet" spiel, put out your right hand and mean it.

There have been times we've put it out and withdrawn it in embarrassment when there seemed to be no response. There is good argument against belting the person who hasn't spotted your outreaching hand. Just reestablish that eye and glance at his/her hand.

Here's the most important part: grip that person's hand.

Do not, under any conditions except in a case of a splint or a cast, roll under those two end fingers. Put it all out there. If you're gonna shake, grip it and do it.

The term wimp was clearly based on the person who put out his/her hand so as to fashion a melting bowl of Jello. No, I'm not advocating you break three bones in a person's digital arrangement merely to prove you're a strong person who is sincere in shaking hands.

But you are to make it a co-gripping, palm to palm, and a definite touching process. And don't drop your arm while shaking. Keep that thing at its proper angle.

You may wonder why this hullabaloo about a handshake. Recently I've been in a lot of gripping situations and some of us are shaking as if we didn't think (a) the shaker was worth a hoot; or (b) the shakee amounted to a tinker's dam. We take a handshake personally, always assuming the worst if we don't get much of a grip back. That person doesn't care about us, we fear inwardly, or we aren't worth a good grip.

Now, now. Don't get all upset. Maybe that wimp shaker just got his cast off, or is new to America or, yes, can't stand you, let alone play palm to palm with you.

It is true there are those who've gone to extremes in the opposite direction. In formal settings it is more tasteful not to yelp in pain when one's grip is overly powerful. And if you fear you're hurting someone, simply keep watch in his/her eyes. If they water up during the handshake, loosen the grip. Also, the value of the handshake is not increased by its length of time. Overpumping of the paw is not viewed as an uptown asset.

Based on my research, a good handshake lasts two to two and a half seconds. It's strong and warm and it's a promise of sorts of good future dealings.

Keeping the other person's hand in yours for say 30 seconds may give rise to loose-tongued commentary from onlookers, unless they know you're swapping harmless personal conversation in the aftermath of the shake.

If you believe, on the other hand (so to speak) that the person toward whom you're advancing is a reluctant, shy shaker, there's nothing wrong with saying, 'I'd like to shake your hand." That's a compliment, a nice thing to say. Or if you have an affliction that makes shaking painful or impossible, let that be known so the other person doesn't feel like a leper.

No one should be hurt over a handshake, in any way, getting or giving, not getting or not giving.

Today we're getting more serious about our handshakes and it's about time.

I look forward to meeting you for your good grip.

Another time perhaps, we better dedicate our efforts to guidelines on the now rampant smooch and hug greetings that have frequently preempted the handshake. I've nothing against that. I'm just usually not one to smooch and hug on the first introduction.

First, I like to get to know a person through his handshake.

Angler's corner

By George Doucette

In salt water this week huge schools of small striped bass are roaming the South Shore area; some local experts say more small bass than they have seen in 10 years. I personally saw a sturgeon get caught off the mouth of Green Harbor. The fish, although only 7 lbs., is still very rare to this area.

A pollack over 50 lbs. was caught off Middle Bank this past week. That is a big fish by any standards and will be a good bet for the Governor's Cup.

The first tuna is in (and early this year). One at 849 lbs. was taken off Provincetown and the boat must have been happy as price is very high this time of year.

On the fresh water side, the high water in the local ponds has produced some rare bass action. While fishing Hobomock Pond with Frank Perotta, we encountered bass in flooded stands of trees where normally there is no water. These fish provided super action on 6" worms with no weights in about a foot of water. All the fish were in the 2 to 4 lb. class.

The Cape and Plymouth trout ponds are still producing excellent rainbow catches. Even though hot weather is in, water temps are still low and trout are more active than usual. Many fish are still feeding in shallow water on insects, minnows, corn, worms, and small spinners. For fast action on a fly rod try calico bass. Furnace and Oldham Ponds have a good population of 1 to 2 lb. fish and they are hitting popping bugs along the west side of the lakes.

Shad are still in the North and South Rivers. Although not plentiful since the rain last week, you can still hook up a good fish. The evenings are still your best time.

Adams Sports & Tackle has a fresh and saltwater Fishing Derby coming up. Come in to register at the store, Rte. 139, Pembroke. Winners in men's, women's and kid's divisions will be awarded trophies for the largest fish in several specials. For more information call 826-8341.

Rabstejnek elected council president

George J. Rabstejnek of Border Street, has been elected to serve as the President of the World Affairs Council of Boston.

The World Affairs Council, located at 22 Batterymarch St., is a non-profit, non-partisan organization which provides educational programs on international issues with the purpose of creating an informed, articulate and influential public.

To achieve this objective, the Council sponsors and develops a broad range of seminars, debates, panel discussions, conferences, travel programs and publications covering foreign affairs and international relations.

Rabstejnek is a member of the Council's Board of Directors and Executive Committee.

Currently, President Rabstejnek is Chairman, Chief Executive, and President of Harbridge House, Inc., Boston. He has had a distinguished and varied professional career. His international work has included founding the International Planning and Analysis Center, Inc. (IPAC), a Washington-based subsidary specializing in third world economic development studies, political analysis, and market studies, and being responsible for Harbridge House's international operations in Europe, the Pacific and Latin America. He also served as Chairman of a joint National Defense Transporation Association/National Security Industrial Association Committee that examined the strategic mobility of the United States.

Mr. Rabstejnek received his B.S. in industrial engineering from Georgia Institute of Technology and has performed graduate work in law and business administration. He is also a graduate of the advanced Management Program at the Harvard Business School.

President Rabstejnek was elected President of the World Affairs Council of Boston at the Council's Annual Meeting, held this year at the Hotel Meridien. At the meeting former President of the Council and Dean of the Fletcher School, Theodore L. Eliot, announced his successor and gave the keynote address on "A Foreign Policy Perspective: 1984."

Cohasset quilters

Three Cohasset residents have played major roles in the making of a Bicentennial Quilt for Derby Academy in Hingham. The quilt, which will be raffled off at Derby's 200th Anniversary Celebration on October 20, consists of 25 squares depicting Derby's history since its founding by Madame Sarah Derby in 1784.

Mrs. John Salin of Duxbury and Mrs. Hugh Kilmartin of Hingham are co-chairmen of the Quilt Committee. Contributing some of the beautifully handcrafted squares are committee members: Mrs. Richard Laggat, a Derby Trustee, of Atlantic Avenue, Mrs. Nicholas Manganaro of North Main Street, and Mrs. James Queeny, formerly of Cohasset and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Guild of Jerusalem Road.

An identical quilt as described above, is also being made by the Quilt Committee for presentation to Derby Academy office on Burditt Avenue in Hingham.

Hospital clinic

Jordan Hospital in Plymouth has formally agreed to operate an obstetric and gynecology clinic serving women from Plymouth and neighboring towns.

The clinic will be free for Medicaid patients; patients who pay their own bills may arrange for installment payments.

The agreement settles an administrative complaint filed by the State Attorney General with the U. S. Department of Health and Human Services in November, 1983, charging Jordan Hospital with violations of the community services provision of the federal Hill-Burton Act.

The Hill-Burton Act requires that all hospitals which received Hill-Burton funds insure that all medical services are available to Medicaid patients.

The alleged unavailability of services developed when all of the obstetricians and gynecologists on Jordan's staff withdrew from the Medicaid program.

Important Savings Are Now Available on Most Types of Insurance.

"And they're available to most people," says insurance professional Beverly English of Whitman. "Showing my clients how to get the reliable insurance coverages they need, at the lowest possible rates, is part of the service we feel we owe our clients," continues the Doran & Mason agent.

Ms. English points out that homeowner's rates vary from company to company; that nonsmokers can often save on both life and fire insurance; and that, although auto rates are state controlled, certain agencies are more successful than others in helping clients press claims.

"Many people aren't aware of the differences. We're a growing, independent agency, nearby, with a full professional staff. We're not tied to one insurance company and we put the accent on prompt, friendly personal service. Also, we're a general agency so we can provide you with all forms of insurance," Ms. English added. "As a qualified agent I write life, health, home, auto, business, boat and other personal and commercial insurance."

Ischia, freqented by the "jet-set" is the largest and most beautiful island in the Bay of Naples. A piece of volcanic rock, it most likely emerged from the water following a volcanic eruption. The ancient Greeks prized the island for its steaming thermal waters, Ischia is warmed by the lava below and sun above. The sunny carefree Neapolitan disposition and warm hospitality are a famous patent and, on this island, they have been tuned to perfection. Only 18 miles from the Italian mainland as the seagull flies, Ischia is a very different Italy. In a country renowned for its serend beauty, this round land mass of only 18 square miles is blessed with vistas of staggering originality, from towering Vesuvius to combinations of seascape.

Musings

By John H. Cutler

☐ If you have to borrow money, borrow from a pessimist. He probably won't expect it back.

☐ Everyone knows that when a diplomat says yes, he means maybe; when he says maybe, he means no; and when he says no, he's no diplomat. It is a fact that diplomats are not paid to get angry.

☐ Some more bloopers:

Got a craw stuck in his throat.

Feeding the fuel.

Chafing at the bit. Have also heard biting at the champ.

Cut and dried in cement.

I'm so exicted I'm wetting my breath.

The people's voice should not be muddled.

Keeping a stiff upper hand.

They just shrug their noses at the suggestion.

☐ Leaders get credit for work they persuade others to do.

☐ I didn't say he looked gloomy. I merely said he had an embalmed look.

Ward plan pulls voters together

By Jane Lane

Who would dare to think that sewers would unify a town?

But that's what occurred at the stroke of midnight at the special town meeting, a session that had begun several hours earlier Tuesday night.

What started as one man's crusade 18 months ago, concluded in the beginning minutes of Wednesday morning with an overwhelming majority of voters approving the Ward Engineering wastewater disposal plan.

Charles DeSantis, who began his mission a year and a half ago, was himself overwhelmed at town meeting's decision to support the Ward Plan 346-44. As the hand count vote was read aloud by Town Moderator William Weeks, the crowd erupted in unanimous jubiliation.

Backslaps, handshakes and kisses were flowing freely as citizens finally approved a plan which has been promised to alleviate the town's wastewater discharge violation. A $2,000 daily fine levied by the state against Cohasset served as noose hanging over the voters' heads, a threat to approve some plan, be it the Metcalf and Eddy project or the Ward study.

As DeSantis commented at the conclusion of his opening remarks Tuesday night, "we have, as a community, fought a very good fight. We have earned the respect of the government. A lot of eyes are upon us tonight. Progress has been painfully slow, but I urge you to pass this article with a resounding yes."

One of the more convincing arguments which concluded the hour and a half-long warrant article debate, was made by attorney Allen VanGestle, counsel for the sewer commission.

He explained in concise terms, that unless the town approved the Ward plan that night, there were no future alternatives.

"You find yourself today with the opportunity to vote on article 48. If your vote is negative, there is no plan at all. And no plan, in my opinion, (would mean) Cohasset

Waiting for the tide to go out

By David Warren

Local shellfish wardens have their signs posted. Harbormasters patrol area flats to ensure no contaminated shellfish are taken. And state officials say it will probably be at least three weeks before levels of toxins caused by red tide will subside to a level low enough to call off the shellfishing ban on the South Shore.

The waiting game has begun.

It has been one week since the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering imposed a ban on the harvesting of shellfish in Cohasset, Scituate and Marshfield. Samples taken from area flats last Wednesday showed levels of toxin from the tide had grown from 80 to around 200 micrograms per gram of shellfish meat in just a week.

Dan Viscardi, a senior sanitation engineer at the Lakeville office of the DEQE, says more tests are scheduled for today, Wednesday, in the Marshfield/Scituate/Cohasset area.

Red tide is the accumulation of microscopic phytoplankton, a food source for shellfish, which "filter-feed" on the organisms and store their toxin in the soft parts of their bodies.

Although harmless to the shellfish, red tide poisoning (also known as paralytic shellfish poioning or PSP) can be harmful, even fatal, to humans (see accompanying story).

Red tide does not affect lobsters, scallops, crabs or fin fish, and is not harmful to swimmers.

"You'd have to ingest a lot of sea water (while bathing) to be affected by it," Viscardi said. "But the water gets so slimy you probably wouldn't want to swim in infested areas anyways."

Eating the shellfish is another story. "You could eat one clam and die. When levels get over 300 the shellfish are very dangerous," Viscardi warned.

Local harbor masters and shellfish wardens have

Voter registration down for election

With the June 30 special runoff election fast approaching, some people may be surprised to find they are no longer on the voter registration list.

A total of 5037 voters were registered for the April town election. The number has decreased significantly for the June 30 election, with 4617 voters currently registered with the Town Clerk's office.

But Town Clerk Frances Marks assures that anyone who arrives at the voting poll next Saturday, and finds he is not on the list, but is not registered elsewhere, will be able to cast his ballot for the selectman's race.

According to Marks, it has been a longtime tradition of the Board of Registrars to make every attempt to find someone's proof of residence and to allow that person to vote. In fact, if anyone is in doubt as to whether he is registered, they may call the town clerk's office and verify on the phone they are a resident and wish to be registered.

There has been additional confusion, Marks explained, because names were dropped off the registration list if they did not appear on the town's census. According to state law, Chapter 51, section 37,57, by the first Monday in June, registrars must send a letter to all persons whose names appeared on the Annual Register last year, but did not appear on the current Street List, informing them that their names have been dropped.

Eugene Crowell is here to stay

He is not entertaining thoughts of retirement now, and until that day arrives, Supt. Eugene Crowell will remain in Cohasset..

As another school year approaches an end, the conductor of this academic orchestration is content.

He is pleased that despite the fiscal bindings of Prop. 2 1/2, and the confusion property revaluation has wreaked upon the school system, Cohasset students still strive above it all. More than eighty percent of this year's graduating class will follow their predecessors and go onto college; a reflection, Crowell says, of the high academic standards this community demands.

It has been three years since he came to Cohasset as superintendent of schools. And at 58, he says retirement is not among his immediate plans. He intends to stay here, not seek other employment, until he decides to retire from education.

A graduate of Tufts University with a master's degree, he also holds a certificate of advanced studies in administrative supervision. Although he first decided to enter the business world, he soon turned to teaching in Woburn. He went onto Topsfield and Danvers, where he his interest in sports spurred his participation as a football, basketball, and hockey coach.

In Danvers he was named director of guidance, then Assistant Superintendent of Secondary Education Curriculum Development. Crowell was later named Superintendent of Schools. He remained at that post for 10 years; in Danvers for a total of 21 years.

He was "looking for a change", and for a South Shore residence, when he was appointed Superintendent of Cohasset schools. "I preferred the high academic climate of Cohasset and its excellent record of college placements," he says. The academic challenges, and also the monetary rewards were high in Cohasset.

Although his stay in Cohasset has been relatively short, he labels himself "an old shoe" within the system - familiar to administrators, teachers, parents, and students alike. His office, located next door to the high school home economics room, echoes with the sounds of nearby students.

He explains, "the kids are on a break between exams today. They've been testing since 7:45 a.m. and it's very

Water testing

June 11, the Board of Health began its weekly summer beach testing. Samples were taken at Black Rock Beach, Sandy Beach, Sandy Cove and the Cohasset Yacht Club pier.

Samples are analyzed for fecal contamination. In the event that contamination is found and is determined to be at a concentration unsafe for swimming, the beach will be clearly posted "Keep Out-Water Polluted."

If you have any questions regarding this matter, please do not hesitate to call the Health Agent at 383-1664.

Cohasset Harbor floats

Cohasset Sailing Club, Inc., is seeking permission from the New England Division, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, to place seasonal floats at the mouth of Bailey Creek in Cohasset Harbor at Cohasset Massachusetts. Nineteen 8 x 18 foot, two 12 x 18 foot and one 4 x 20 foot floats and a 4 x 26 floor ramp would be used in conjunction with a sailing fleet.

The application for the federal permit was filed with the Engineers in compliance with Seciton 10 of the River and Harbor Act of 1899 which provides for federal regulation of any work in, under or over navigable waters of the United States.

To assist in evaluating whether installation of the floats should be allowed to continue, the Engineers are soliciting public comments. Written statements should be forwarded to their office no later than July 9, 1984. Additional information may be obtained by contacting Ralph Atkinson at the New England Division, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, 424 Trapelo Road, Waltham, MA 02254, telephone 617-647-8497 (toll free 1-800-362-4367).

Student council reps

Joan Chisholm, a junior, and Jacqueline Plante, recently graduated from Cohasset High School are two of 1,500 student council leaders and faculty advisers attending the 48th National Conference of the National Association of Student Councils (NASC) June 28-July, 1984 in Coventry, Rhode Island near Providence.

With a theme of "Looking Inward, Reaching Upward," the conference program will present workshop sessions on leadership skills, effective student government projects, and student activity program development.

Chisholm is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Chisholm, 605 Jerusalem Road, and Plante is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Plante, of Grace Drive, Cohasset. While at Cohasset High School, Chisholm was elected president of the student council and vice president of her senior class. Plante graduated last week. She has been accepted and is planning to attend Tufts University in the College of Engineering program. She was vice president of the student council in her senior year.

Waste oil disposal

The Board of Health wishes to advise townspeople that waste oil is considered (by the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering) a hazardous waste and cannot be randomly disposed of. Do not put it in the landfill, dumpsters, storm drains, etc. Waste oil drained from cars, boats, or machinery should be brought to a gas station as they have the proper tanks for storage, as well as an agreement for disposal with a hazardous waste contractor.

Waste oil improperly disposed of (even small amounts) can travel into brooks or streams and cause serious pollution problems. Further, private drinking water supplies can become contaminated by infiltraiton of waste oil.

Please help to protect our environment by properly disposing of your waste oil.

If there are any questions, please do not hesitate to contact the Health Agency at 383-1664.

The movies come to Cohasset

The pastoral beauty of Cohasset has brought fame to our town once again.

Wednesday afternoon, film crews from a Boston studio were scheduled to shoot a scene for a corporate commercial. According to Newbury Film Vice President Bill Walker, the film will be used by Digital Electronics for a corporate presentation.

No local people will be included in the Cohasset shot, he said. Three Cohasset police officers were requested for a detail at Sandy Beach to control traffic. They will not be included in the actual film sequence, Walker said.

The filmmaker said the Cohasset location will be used to film a car racing down Atlantic Avenue. The promotional film will use the metaphor "Digital races ahead of the competition," Walker said.

Police Chief Joseph Kealey said this is just one of several films or commmercials photographed in Cohasset using police details, "but we've never seen any of them," he added.

Town employees win voter support

Town meeting rejected the arguments issued by the town's advisors Tuesday night, and supported the financial requests of their town employees.

Despite a stern warning by the advisory committee to deny a fulltime assistant for the Town Clerk, the proposal was approved. Frances Marks explained that without the 35-hour assistant, the census, voter registration and street listings could not be accurately compiled into the computer system

Selectmen backed up Marks' request, saying the current 15-hour position is ineffective in the operation of the Town Clerk's office.

Applause followed approval of the warrant article which passed, 157 to 127.

Although there was lengthy debate on the request, voters overwhelmingly supported leasing a rubber tire front end loader for the landfill. The five-year lease/-purchase agreement will cost the town about $20,000, although competitive bids will be sought from manufacturing firms.

As landfill supervisor Joseph Laugelle explained, the present trackscavator machine is 13 years old and in need of constant, expensive repairs.

"I am shocked the advisory board turned against me," he said. "If I wasn't honest, I wouldn't stand here now and ask for this. I am a taxpayer myself and I urge all my friends to vote this article."

Dog Officer Richard Yokum made a personal plea to town meeting for a $5000 appropriation for a second-hand van to be used to pick up stray animals. Currently, the parttime animal control officer uses his personal pickup truck.

Last month alone, he said, he put 500 miles on his truck for animal calls . Glenn Pratt of King Street urged voters to approve the motion. Noting advisory committee member William Lean had previously speculated a van would probably be used by Officer Yokum for personal use as well as animal calls, Pratt said, "for the advisory board to make a comment such as that is characteristic of the way our town employees have been treated." His statement received loud applause from the voters.

Advisory Lean later apologized for the comment which he said had been misconstrued.

Voter registration down for election . . .

Registrars must remove from the Annual Register the name of any such person. These names will not be placed on the new Voting List unless the registrars learn that the person continues to be a resident. It is not necessary for such a person to re-register; a return card or signed letter is sufficient.

In fact, Marks noted, it has been a long-standing tradition of the Board of Registrars to allow anyone who confirms he is a resident and who wishes to vote in an election, to do so.

A phone call or a visit to the town clerk's office will assure the registrars that the resident is sincere in his efforts to obtain his voting privilege, Marks added.

Every effort has always been made by the registrars to allow all residents to vote, she said. It is the duty of the Board of Registrars to search every available town list to find the name of the resident who has been deleted from the voter registration, but who wishes to cast a ballot.

State law outlines in great detail the duties and responsibilities the registrars must complete for registering voters.

An example of how the confusion begins, Marks said, is evident on several of the census replies returned to her office this year. Several people corrected the addresses of family members who are away at school, in a nursing home or in military service. Although many people followed this procedure, on the back of the form it stated that if that person wishes to remain a registered voter and resident of the town, the current Cohasset address must not be changed.

Many people who corrected the addresses later found family members deleted from the voter registration list earlier this month, the town clerk said.

The Board of Registrars will hold a special session July 9 at 7:30 p.m. to listen to voters' comments about the registration process.

Red tide ban still in effect . . .

little to report on the tide, except to say that they have posted the affected areas and are keeping on eye on them.

Cohasset harbormaster Harry Ritter says he's just waiting for further word from the DEQE, and until then he'll go about his regular business. The only clamming area in Cohasset is a small strip on Whitehead Beach, and only 16 town residents have taken out permits so far this year to dig there.

"One week we have the sewerage plant over flow, and the next we have red tide. It's always something," Ritter said. The Whitehead Beach shellfish area was closed last Monday after partially treated sewage spilled into Cohasset harbor.

That spill came a few days after 25,000 gallons of raw sewage overflowed from the Scituate treatment plant into the North River because of heavy rains. Flats in Marshfield and Scituate were still closed when the red tide ban was ordered.

Cohasset shellfish warden James Curley said all is quiet down at Whitehead Beach, where he has two signs posted alerting would-be diggers of the ban.

Over in Scituate, the situation is the same. Shellfish constable Joseph Strazdes said "we've had no problems--once the word is out and the people are informed, they comply to the ban pretty good."

Of the tide, Strazdes remarked, "hopefully it will peak out and return to a dormant stage . . . it doesn't always hit us. We've been fortunate; the last the tide came around here was seven years ago. But the people have been complying and hopefully they will continue to comply.

"We just have to wait for it to pass. Hopefully it will clear up by the July 4 weekend."

Strazdes said there is only one commercial mussel harvester in the three towns, so the tide has no affect on area restaurants. So far this year, Scituate has issued 690 recreational permits for shellfishing. That number will undoubtedly rise, as 1219 permits were issued by the town last year.

Marshfield, which also sports a large number of shellfish flats, (primarily on the North River) has issued 436 permits to date in 1984, compared to a 1983 figure of 816 permits. Lawrence Bonney, shellfish warden and harbormaster for Marshfield reports that all shellfish areas have been closed and posted, and are being patrolled daily.

The current bloom of red tide got its start in Maine and quickly spread down the Atlantic coast. A 30-mile stretch of shoreline between Manchester and New Hampshire was closed off two weeks ago, and the ban has extended beyond the South Shore to the Cape Cod Canal. The DEQE is monitoring the Cape region closely, Viscardi said, and the tide has shown no signs of letting up.

Scientists have not yet determined just what causes blooms of red tide to appear, and they have also yet to understand its lifecycle. So for now, shellfish lovers will have to turn from there own shores to other sources for their clams, oysters and mussels, and hope that this tide will leave our waters as quickly as it invaded them.

"What's Best For The Town, Is The Only Decision Selectmen Ever Have To Make" —Mary Jane McArthur

In Mary Jane McArthur's first contest for elected office, there was simply no contest. She was overwhelmingly elected to the Cohasset Board of Selectmen in the spring of 1981. Voters had long recognized her interest and ability through her various services to Town government boards and committees.

She served on the Advisory Committee for four years, assuming the responsibilities of Vice Chairman for two of those years.

She served on the Capital Budget Committee, the School Facilities Committee, the Government Island Committee, the Conservation Commmission, the Historical Commission and the Coastal Zone Management Task Force. All in all, her twenty years of contiuous Town service gave her a remarkable sense of public perspective.

By the time Mary Jane took her seat on the Board of Selectmen, she knew how town government operated. More importantly, she knew how it should operate.

By nature, Mary Jane is an organizer. In those early years, her fellow selectmen joked about her need to organized everything. It is no joke. Organizers don't get big headlines in the newspapers, and Mary Jane's many hours of diligent work in the selectmen's office, and her proposals to change things, went unnoticed in the "world" news.

Nevertheless, in 1981 and 1982 she made strides in the following areas: developing and incorporating policies and procedures to promote sound management; the improvement of communications between the Selectmen and Town boards and committees, many of which she had been a member of; and in the accessibility of the board of selectmen to you.

As a former Advisory Committee Vice Chairman, and as a new Selectman, she knew Selectmen shared these goals, but were unsure as to how to proceed. She worked diligently and quietly in the writing of job descriptions for various town department heads, and in developing "charges" for selectmen-appointed committees and boards.

1982-1983

In 1982 progress was being made in many areas. Selectmen received budgets and made recommendations on warrant articles at town meeting. But it was difficult work, and there were only three selectman to do it.

In 1983, with three new selectmen on the board, the change that Mary Jane had anticulated and long sought was accomplished. Times had changed, the town realized that change had taken place, and the electorate reflected this realization. Cohasset now had an expanded board.

The first action of the newly constituted five-man board took was to hold its meetings in the Town Hall auditorium, something Mary Jane had lobbied for since 1981. Its second act was to elect Mary Jane chairman of the board.

Mary Jane does not feel the five man board is necessarily "better" than the three-member board, she feels it is simply fresher. And coming from a varied field, they bring to the board a broader view.

In 1983-84 the selectmen's policy manual, which had been started by the three-man board, was expanded upon and acted upon more frequently. Having more selectmen made it possible for the board to attend numerous, and not infrequent informational meetings of the Mass. Municipal Association.

Additional selectmen also made it possible for Mary Jane to realize another dream...having members of the board of selectmen serve as liaisons to various appointed and elected boards and committees.

Licensing procedures were scrutinized. Mary Jane and the three-member board had "turned over the rock" in 1982-1983, and "there it all was," she says.

Citizens, abutters and others were complaining about the inconsistent enforcement of rules, regulations and bylaws. The inconsistencies were creating litigation. The selectmen, under Mary Jane's leadership, went to work to resolve this issue.

Today

"We are fortunate to have a population which represents a broad spectrum of thought, life styles, interests and intellect," Mary Jane says. "This spectrum includes the very old families, the very new families, and all the families in-between. The job of the elected officials is to listen to all points of view, to take the best of each, and come up with decisions which result in the greatest good for the greatest number. It's not an easy task. Some people will be alienated."

Mary Jane feels one of her personal assets is her ability to "bring people together." She likes to work through a team approach, and feels the five-man board has been particularly effective as a team.

For the past year Mary Jane has mentioned, several times, the possibility of selectmen creating a periodic newsletter and/or holding more informal drop-in sessions at Town Hall. These sessions will give citizens an opportunity to express their opinions on issues, make suggestions and elicit responses from their elected officials. Recently, Mary Jane noticed the very successful and well-read student Lamplight page which is published periodically in the Mariner, and wondered whether Mariner publisher David Cutler might consider giving the selectmen some space.

"The position of selectman is not without its frustrations. We work on solutions to problems for months, digesting facts, meeting with counsel on our legal responsibilities, meeting with negotiators and other experts on how to accomplish what Town Meeting has voted, whether in the form of a new or old bylaw, or a recent town meeting action. It becomes difficult to update the public on the progress which has been made with regard to fact-finding, fact-collecting. For legal reasons, much of it can't even be discussed."

Mary Jane says "Improvements and changes are slow in town government. We welcome improvement, but we measure change carefully."

More than 500 voters consider full warrant

The largest crowd in recent town meeting history packed the high school auditorium Monday evening.

Be it the cool temperatures, the insistent pleadings by town officials, or the sewer article, more than 500 voters flocked to the first night of the special town meeting.

Town Moderator William Weeks, who for the past year has studied the problems surrounding town meeting quorum, was elated at the turnout, and remained cautiously optimistic about a repetition Tuesday night. With 23 warrant articles under their belt, voters might be lured back a second night, he said, to vote the proposed sewer plan.

Although Sewer Commission Chairman Charles DeSantis had publically alerted voters he would motion to move the Ward sewer project article from its last-place entry on the warrant, to a 9:30 p.m. slot Monday night, voters disapproved the move. In a hand count, a margin of 15 voters rejected DeSantis' move to push the article forward on the warrant.

Selectmen Chairman Clifford Mitman explained that board's opposition to the move, and said "we prefer to deal with everything on the plate. All we are suggesting is that everyone attend town meeting tommorrow night (Tuesday)."

A few articles were withdrawn Monday night from the warrant. Article 11 which requested $41,000 to upgrade the town's one-year old computer system has been withheld, probably until a second special town meeting in the fall.

According to Executive Secretary Mark Lanza, "there were too many unanswered questions regarding the technical information as to why the system is not performing at a level of efficiency we need." Between now and a probable fall town meeting, town officials will study the present system, prioritize its deficiencies, and recommend changes. Town Accountant William Signorelli has suggested that additional hardware will be necessary to accomodate the increased use of the computer system.

Article 17, regarding the reconstruction and repair of Mill River Bridge, was also indefinitely postponed. Negotiations have been underway for some time with the state to determine what funds will be available for the renovation project.

On the whole, the overflowing crowd responded favorably to warrant requests. Indicative of the large turnout, was their vocal, almost festive mood through much of the long evening.

One Reservoir Road resident made comment on almost every article reviewed Monday with a few spry remarks, and little opposition to his opinions. Robert Appleyard questioned segments of articles no one else cared to comment upon.

His best argument came during a discussion to deny article five, which requested a revision of the zoning bylaw to limit the amount of earth materials which can be removed to added to any premise in town.

When Wayne Sawchuck complained that the revision threatened the basic private property owner's rights, several persons agreed.

Noting that not more than ten cubic yards of material can be removed or added to a premise in one year, Appleyard added, "you can damn near take ten yards of loam in on your shoes." The crowd roared their appreciation, as Appleyard warned the planning board to return to the drawing board. The article was later denied by voters.

In all, there were six planning board articles reviewed at Monday's meeting. Five of the articles dealt with detailed revisions of the zoning bylaw wording. Article four pertaining to appointments to the Board of Appeals was approved, along with article six, to redefine the exisiting defintion of "lot," "line lot rear" and "yard setback." Planning Board Chairman Daniel Cotton told will be in contempt of court and the ($2000 daily) fine would be levied," he said. "If you vote yes, whatever the plan, my opinion is that no court will determine the town to be in contempt."

Overwhelming approval of Ward Plan

Soon after the argument presented by the attorney, voices were heard, requesting the vote on the article be moved. It was midnight when a hand count of the voters revealed the unanimous decision to support the Ward plan.

In his opening statements to the 400 town meeting voters packed into the uncomfortably humid high school auditorium, DeSantis explained the benefits of supporting the Ward plan.

The number one priority, he said, was that it would satisfy the town's discharge permit currently in violation of state code. Equally important, he added, it would be accomplished at a price Cohasset could afford.

The article requested the town appropriate $1,091,-095 for the plan which would sewer 372 problem systems in town, make several on-site septic system repairs, provide a connection to the Hull wastewater treatment plant and convert the Elm Street plant to a pumping station, and encompass a long-range management plan for on-site systems.

Further, an amendment added to the article a few minutes later by DeSantis and approved by town meeting, would allow the business district along Route 3A from Beechwood Street to the Scituate line, and Brewster Road, to be included in the planned sewer district. That provision was included with the article, as long as additional costs to the town is reimbursed by the federal and state government and private funding. This amendment was reached as a compromise to the Route 3A businessmen who insisted they be included in the sewer district, allowing their companies opportunity to expand in the future.

DeSantis listed several advantages to the plan, the primary motivation being the conclusion of the town's discharge permit violation and pending fine.

Arguments as to exact levels of state and federal funding have been a main concern to many residents throughout the year and a half since the Metcalf and Eddy central sewer plan was rejected.

In a summarized version of a letter written by the John McMahon, director of the Department of Water Pollution Control of the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering, a largely negative view of the possibility of state funding for the project was addressed. Former sewer commission chairman Jan Daggert presented the summary for the audience, which concluded that it would be most appropriate for Cohasset to fund the entire $8.6 million project cost, rather than fall severely short of funding when state and federal grant money is not made available.

Commission chairman DeSantis countered that Cohasset will appeal any decreased funding appropriations from DEQE to the federal EPA "who are the ones who write the rules and set the regulations." DeSantis told the voters he remains extremely optimistic about the grant receipts, and cautioned that if money was not made available, "we can't afford to sewer anywhere. With your vote, we will get the 94 percent funding for on-site repairs. We are talking a maximum $2 1/2 million increase if we don't get the expected funding. We will appeal it to the EPA and we shall prevail and get that funding."

Sewer commission Joseph Gwinn, who stood alone, opposed to the plan proposed by DeSantis and member Ted Guild, had presented an amendment for the town to return to the Metcalf and Eddy plan, but it was ruled out of order.

At the conclusion of the town meeting, amidst the uproar of the Ward plan proponents, Gwinn rationalized that the voters wisely approved the article in order to prevent the contempt of court penalty, "but it is a program that is not affordable and will not be funded, as stated in the DEQE's letter. It will also be three years before there is any real action as the government works in lengthy appropriation cycles."

Catching his breath for a moment among the celebration, DeSantis commented, "going into this meeting, I wondered if there would be a differentiation between voters. But the plan sold itself and anyone who questioned the plan came around. I'm very grateful for myself and for this community I love so much."

With that, he turned to embrace his wife who had patiently waited among the line of well-wishers.

AMERICAN CABLESYSTEMS

CABLESYSTEMS UPDATE

As the construction of Cohasset cable television system nears completion, we want to take this opportunity to keep the townspeople informed of the progress and answer questions that may arise. We will use this space for regular cable news updates.

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS ABOUT CABLE TELEVISION

What Is Cable Television?

Cable Television transmits signals through coaxial cable as opposed to broadcasting through the air. Cable uses satellites, microwave and large central antennas to transmit not only stronger, clearer signals but also programs and individual channels just for cable.
tainers.

Do I Need A Cable Ready Television Set?

No. It is not necessary to purchase a T.V. specially designed to handle cable signal. Even an old thriteen inch black and white set can be hooked up to cable. Cablesystems equipment will enable all sets to receive the special cable signal. Cablesystems also has a remote control option that will adapt to any T.V. set.

Will My Reception Improve With Cable?

Yes. Because cable television signals are sent through wires and directly to your television receiver, they are not affected by weather, local conditions or proximity to the transmitter. You receive the cleanest, sharpest and most color perfect reception possible.

What Types of Programming Does Cable Offer?

Cable offers a whole new world of entertainment, information and education. Blockbuster movies, night club acts, Broadway plays, cultrual and performing arts, special sports channels, 24-hour news and weather, foreign language channels are just the beginning to what cable can offer.

Next time...More on specific cable channels and programming.

☐ Had a grand chat with Peg Ramsey recently, and what a great time she has been having. If you hadn't spotted her until recently, its because she was spending a long vacation in Hawaii with her son Steve. Peg claims that it is the closest thing to Paradise that she's ever seen! Now Peg is back, and so is son Steve, for a while. Steve is here with his new bride Karen (Kleinfelter) after their recent marriage in Cleona, Penn. The newlyweds will spend their honeymoon in Cohasset and touring New England, then it is back to Oahu to live. Steve is stationed at Barbers Point Naval Air Station. Best wishes to Steve and Karen.

☐ Sarah Lualdi, a student at Thayer Academy, has been selected as a member of the Jordan Marsh Fashion Board. The board members attend monthly meetings on fashion and are also featured in junior fashion shows, and they also model informally in the junior department. They also assist the fashion and special events offices with some in-store events. Other students in the past have received this honor, and they have claimed it to be a giant step in the world of fashion, good work Sarah.

☐ While on the subject of fashion, Karen Golden (daughter of Doris and Jack Golden, Bound Brook Lane) made fashion headlines last week! Karen, who is Perry Ellis' vice president in charge of merchandising for the men's division, was given credit by Perry Ellis for having done an outstanding job. Perry and his team were named the outstanding United States designer of menswear by the nation's fashion press for the second year.

☐ Grandmothers are the neatest people! Had a phone call from one such proud and excited gal the other night, it was Carol Walls. Carol was on her way to see her new ganddaughter, Caroline Keegan Hines, in New York. Carey (as she will be called) is the daughter of Colleen (Walls)and Stephen Hines,and checked in at a hefty 8 lbs. 3 ozs. Both sets of grandparents reside in Cohasset . . . Bob and Carol Walls live on Fair Oaks Lane, and Robey and Dorsey Hines-Robey live on Ledgeway. You can be sure that Carey will be seen in Cohasset as soon as she can make the trip!

Travel Along with Evlo Young
After buying an airline ticket, you decide not to use it, it can be turned in and you generally will receive a refund. If no part of the ticket has been used, you are usually entitled to a full refund. If some part has been used, the refund will be limited to only the unused portion. For example, let us assume that you have a ticket for a flight from New York to London to Rome and back to New York. If only the New York—London—New York portions are used, you will get a refund for the amount of the London-Rome-London trip. It is helpful to consider a ticket to be a check made out to you by the airline. Instead of using this "check" to pay for the cost of transportation, it can be turned in for cash.

Editorials

Thanks again, Charlie

Never in the recent history of town meeting have so many people flocked to the high school auditorium. And it was only one article that lured these numbers two nights in succession.

While other towns are reviewing charters, and sermonizing from pulpits about the sanctity of town meeting, Cohasset literally breezed through 40 warrant articles in two nights.

It was a vocal, almost festive crowd that was drawn Monday and Tuesday night to the special town meeting. More than 500 attended the first session, believing the sewer article would be prioritized from its last-place entry on the warrant. But the second night, much more humid and uncomfortable than the previous evening, also generated about 400 voters. Not bad Cohasset, considering other towns can't make a 200 quorum in the best or worst climatic conditions.

And whether you love him, like him or just tolerate him, credit must be given where it is due - to Charlie DeSantis.

This man has given up the past 18 months to pursue the alternative sewer plan with a dedication almost incomprehensible. A man with a well-used gift of humor, who often introduces himself as "Cohasset's Person of the Year," Charlie is probably the most well-prepared advocate Cohasset is likely to witness.

Whether before selectmen, the advisory board or a public audience, Charlie has become an increasingly polished and organized speaker. He is a salesman, an orator, an organizer, and a man with an uncommon level of zeal.

Whether it is a soccer league or septic systems, Charlie puts his entire self into the cause and won't surrender under pressure. He's going to need that perseverance in the next few years as he battles the state and federal government for funding appropriations. He would be the last to admit it is an easy challenge, but Cohasset is lucky to have Charlie on their side.

For the past two years, he has made state offices on Winter Street in Boston his second home. He is not fearful of rejection, and seems fired at the possibility of continuing his battle against the the bureaucrats.

Whether the Ward plan is the best for Cohasset or not, we should be grateful there are residents like Charlie DeSantis, willing to accept the challenge for the rest of us.

Can you hear me now?

A festive mood enveloped the crowd that attended both nights of the special town meeting this week.

A vocal group, opinions were bantered about with ease and often times, with eloquence. But there were some observations to be made about the 1984 special summer edition of town meeting.

First of all - those microphones. The speakers were duly informed by wiring inspector Steve Wigmore that it was not faulty microphones, it was the fault of the speakers who garbled their pronouncements.

All in all, it was figured that every other word uttered at the town meeting was audible. Do the voters actually realize they appropriated money for the landfill machine ? I wonder if everyone yet realizes the Ward plan proposal is now reality ?

Speak directly into the microphones, each person was reminded. Yet messages were mushed in half, proposals were chopped into bits, until voters approved just about every warrant article in frustration.

The weather changes from one night to another was also strange. One night, the high school aduitorium was just about the most comfortable place to be situated for four hours, even shoulder to shoulder with 500 people.

But by Tuesday night, and early Wednesday at 12 a.m., the humidity was high enough to raise tempers and temperatures.

But this special town meeting is now history. And it's back to the sewers.

Bearing up under the loneliness

By Claire McDonough

"I'm delighted that Patrick has a summer job as an island manager in Boston Harbor," the Dragon mused, "but I'm really going to miss him. He'll be working five days a week, and sleeping on the island. That means we'll only get to see him on his days off."

"I know," I agreed, "but he really loves camping, he's a whiz at biology, and Lovell's Island is beautiful. It's a terrific opportunity for him, and we'll just have to resign ourselves to being lonely."

Two weeks later Pat left for his first stint on "his" island. He waved goodbye, and I bravely choked back the tears.

Pat's siblings acknowledged they'd miss him, but they had a little less trouble resigning themselves to his absence.

"After all," Skipper added as he bit the bottom off an ice cream cone, allowing melted ice cream to drip on his shirt, "Jason can use Pat's bed when he sleeps over, and we won't have to worry about Pat using up all the hot water when he takes a shower."

"Right," Breida agreed, "and we can think of it as not so much losing a brother as gaining a telephone."

"I wonder," Skipper pondered, "if he took my socks and underwear with him."

"Probably," Breida replied. "They were his in the first place. You just beat him to the dryer the last time they were washed."

"I think you're both terrible," I told them. "Do you realize he'll be all alone on that island at night? Weird people could try to force him to tell them where pirate treasure is buried, and he won't know, and they might do horrible things to him."

"Mother," Breida said gently, "you worry too much. Remember the time Pat biked to Maine, and when you hadn't heard from him by the end of the first week you assumed he'd been kidnapped by some cult that would hold him captive and make him live on yogurt and bean curd?"

"It could have happened," I told her defensively. "And anyway, if you read Edward Rowes Snow's books you know that lots of strange things have happened on those islands."

She patted my hand. "He'll be back before you have time to miss him."

As it happened, Breida's words were prophetic.

Three nights later Pat came through the front door just as we were sitting down to dinner. He looked tanned and healthy, and he was carrying enough dirty laundry to outfit the Celtics for next year's basketball season.

"I have two days off," he announced cheerfully.

"There goes our hot water," Skipper mumbled. "And Jason's bed."

Breida blocked his way to the telephone. "I'm expecting a call from Ralph," she told him. "Touch that phone and you're dead meat."

Two days later we once again waived goodbye. I knew I'd miss his binoculars when I wanted to see the orchard orioles in our willow tree, but on the whole we adjusted fairly well.

The following day, Sunday, we had just completed dinner when a ravenously hungry Patrick showed up. He had managed to wear every item in his wardrobe in the past 24 hours.

"Last week my days off were at the end of the week," he said. "This week they're at the beginning. I don't have to be back till Friday."

The Dragon smiled. "It's good to see you, Pat."

Then he looked at me. "You know, I think I'm going to bear up under the loneliness after all."

Letter

A rule in etiquette

To the Editor:

I feel that I must point out to you certain traditions and social responsibilities.

When an employee of any standing is hospitalized, it is an accepted practice to send an appropriate card. When a dedicated and trusted employee of thrity-three years is hospitalized, it is an accepted practice to send a card, flowers, or to inquire as to his condition.

As a member of Paul Emanuello's family, I am sadly aware of the fact that there have been no cards, flowers, or inquiries from any members of the Cohasset High School staff.

In view of the fact that Mr. Emanuello is due to retire in a few weeks, it is hard to imagine that this situation is due to an oversight, but would appear to be a deliberate attempt to undermine a man's life work. If this is the case, there should be no place for such small mindedness in an educational system.

My father is a gentle, hard-working, sensitive man. He takes pride in what he has accomplished in his life. If nothing more he deserves a certain respect for the years he has dedicated, and the pride he has taken in the Cohasset Public Schools.

One furthernote; As long as the situation goes uncorrected, it will be detrimental to my father's health.

Litchfield's owners tell residents their story

Letter

(This is a letter written to the residents of Cohasset by Barron and Isabel Salvador, owners of Litchfield Express, Inc. Ed).

..."The issue is simple" - Words taken from the Cohasset Mariner issue of June 14, 1984, and stated by Chairman of the Board of Selectmen, Clifford Mitman, and now we take issue with ...

...the issue is simple — Feb. 8, 1984 — our attorney, Joseph D'Agastino, came before the Board of Selectman to present the case history of the greement with the Town of Cohasset for use of town owned land, Lot 25, Bayberry Lane, adjectant to 30 Bayberry Lane — Lot 25 being non-conforming.

1. ...the issue is simple — Town of Cohasset, represented by the Honorable Board of Selectmen in 1969, entered into an agrement with Litchfield's Express for the use of the property at 25 Bayberry Lane, town owned property, whereby Litchfields' Express would abandon their non-conforming business use status at 81 Plesant Street, which reverted to residential use. This was done because the Board of Selectmen felt tha it was in the best interest of the town, since Pleasant Street, once having been a dead-end street, had now become a through way with the .development of Reservoir Road and Old Pasture Road, etc.; that Lot 25, bordering Route 3A would not present any problem or hardship to anyone and would be easy access for our trucks to enter and leave the area. An agreement was made and has been honored throughout the years until this point in time — many years later.

2. ...the issue is simple — Feb. 15, 1984 — Members of the Board of Selectmen violated our rights while we were out of state, breaking the "Open Meeting" law, discussing Litchfield Express as a zoning violation in Executive Session. As a result of this illegal meeting, the Board of Selectmen ordered us to remove our trucks in ninety (90) days. (Vote 4 — 0)

3. ...The issue is simple — Tuesday, March 13, 1984 — Litchfields' Express filed suit against the Town of Cohasset — "That the Board of Selectmen in revoking the Plaintiffs irrevocable license exceeded its authority, was inconsistent, arbitrary and unreasonable."

4. ...the issue is simple - Saturday, March 17, 1984 -Upon notifying the then Chairman of the Board of Selectmen, Mrs. Mary Jane McArthur, that we had obtained and still have in our possession, a taping of the Feb. 15, 1984 meeting. This tape includes what transpired in Executive Session whereby the Board of Selectmen discussed Litchefields' Express without having notified us, therefore, should not even have been held in Executive Session since a zoning violation is not material for Executive Session Meeting. Later that same day, Saturday, March 17, 1984, Chairman McArthur came to our home at 30 Bayberry Lane to inform us that she had met with Mr. Mitman and Mr. DeBassio, members of the Board of Selectmen, and they had reviewed the tape and admitted that they had indeed violated the "Open Meeting Law". Chairman McArthur then "promised" that the following Thursday, March 22, 1984, that we would be vindicated where Town Counsel had not been made aware of all the information we had presented on Feb. 8, 1984. She said that Town Counsel described it as an Estopol agreement; whereby you give something in return for something, you can not take back what you have already given because they can not give back to us what we originally gave up. On Sunday, March 18, 1984; Monday, March 19, 1984; and again on Tuesday, March 20, 1984, Chairman McArthur called to confirm her conversation of Saturday, March 17, 1984, that everything would be resolved at the meeting, Thursday, March 22, 1984. However, on Wednesday, March 21, 1984, the day before the scheduled meeting, Chairman McArthur called once again to say that the Board of Selectmen needed another week because they "wanted to do things right this time to resolve their problems."-

5. ...the issue is simple — Wednesday, March 28, 1984 — We met with the Board of Selectmen, at their request, to resolve the matter; whereupon, Town Counsel, Mr. Henderson, requested "more time to legitimatize the use of Lot 25 since we were prepared to purchase the property at a fair price, and Town Counsel felt this was a possible solution. He also stated tha another alternative would be for the Board of Selectmen and the Board of Appeals to agree to a Consent Decree without formality of a variance which is binding on all parties." (This was obtained from the actual minutes of the Board of Selectmen of Wednesday, March 28, 1984.) We agreed to give Town Counsel more time since he felt his priorities at this time should be for the annual Town Meeting.

6. ...the issue is simple — In early May, at the request of Town Counsel, Mr. Henderson, a meeting was held at our attorney's office is Marshfield, to discuss the options that had been presented by Town Counsel to the Board of Selectmen. Mr. Henderson informed us that he would return to the Board of Selectmen with the preference that we purchase the Lot at 25 Bayberry Lane and discuss a fair price. Due to the untimely notification of the meeting to be held on May 23, 1984, and due to Town Counsel's recommendation to our attorney, "that we need not be present at this meeting as it was "decision" time," and since we assumed a litigation matter would be discussed in Executive Session, we did not attend the May 23 meeting.

7. ...the issue is simple — Wednesday, May 23, 1984 — Again our rights were violated when the Board of Selectmen discussed the litigation issue in open session and, at this meeting, allowed Mr. John Rhodes, III, to speak on the issue. Mr. Rhodes, according to the May 24, 1984 issue of the Quincy Patriot Ledger, made allegations that our trucks "begin operation at 4 a.m. and he needs relief after fifteen years." Mr. Rhodes had absolutely no foundation for these statements at all since: 1) Mr. Rhodes has only resided at 26 Bayberry Lane for less than two years and; 2) Mr. Rhodes works the midnight to 8 a.m. shift as a patrolman on the Cohasset Police Force. Our trucks begin operation between 8 a.m. and 8:30 a.m. every morning with the exception of one truck which moves at 6:45 a.m. once a month. Had we known this discussion was to be allowed, we feel sure we should have been there to defend ourselves. As a result of this meeting, we were notified that we have sixty (60) days to remove our trucks from Bayberry Lane. (Vote 3 — 0)

8. ...the issue is simple - - Wednesday, June 6, 1984 — At our request, we met with the Board of Selectmen to express our concerns over the May 23, 1984 meeting in which we felt our rights were once again violated, since we are still in litigation. Our cncern now rests upon the fact that the current Chairman of the Board of Selectmen, Mr. Mitman said "What Litigation?!!"

9. ...the issue is simple — Rather than being vindicated as "promised" by the then Chairman of the Board of Selectemn, Mrs. Mary Jane McArthur, on March 17, 1984, the Board of Selectmen continue to be inconsistent, arbitrary, and unreasonable. They choose to ignore the recommendations Town Counsel, Mr. Henderson indicated to us at our meeting. They find it simpler to "Clear the Decks" — a quote by Mr. Frank England, member of the Board of Selectmen, in the illegal executive session of Feb. 15, 1984, and stay fast, calling it simply — a zoning violation.

10. ...The issue should be simple — In 1969, the Honorable Board of Selectmen entered into agreement with Litchfields' Express for use of non-conforming land, Lot 25, Bayberry Lane — that because the land was unbuildable and backed up to Route 3A, it would not creat any hardship to the neighbors and, at that time, it seemed to be the desire of the Town and the Board of Selectmen to assist small business people.

In conclusion — to our immediate neighbors —if we have unknowingly offended you, we are sincerely sorry.

Litchfields' Express is part of our heritage, as it is also a part of the heritage of Cohasset. This fact is noted in the publication "History of Cohasset."

Defining red tide and its consequences

By David Warren

Scientists have yet to determine what causes red tide to form and spread as it does, but they can tell us what it is and what it can do to us.

Red tide is the massing of microscopic phytoplankton in the ocean, which at high concentrations can make the water appear red.

To see a red tide requires a density of 20,000 of these uni-cellular organisms (called dinoflagellates) per milliliter of water.

The danger is that red tide can poison humans who eat contaminated shellfish with dinoflagellate concentrations of 200 micrograms of poison per gram of shellfish meat--levels which can develop even when the tide can't be seen.

The toxin that is passed on from contaminated shellfish to humans during a red tide is called paralytic shellfish poisoning, or PSP. Bi-valves such as soft-shell clams, oysters and mussels "filter-feed" on the dinoflagellates, and toxins from the plankton are stored in the soft part of the body.

People who are susceptible to PSP can become sick at levels of 80 micrograms of toxin per gram of meat. It is for this reason that the state closes shellfish beds at this level.

When levels reach 200 to 300, as they have in our area, almost everyone is susceptible to PSP, although the toxin's effect can vary sharply from person to person.

It is the responsibility of the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) to monitor and test the ocean for red tide, and order bans on shellfishing when levels toxic to humans are present. Dan Viscardi, a senior sanitation engineer with the DEQE, warns "a person can eat one clam and die. When levels get up over 300 the shellfish are very dangerous."

A person who ingests enough toxin to be poisoned will begin feeling the effects of PSP within an hour, Viscardi said. "First, your tongue and lips would get numb, and it would spread to the rest of your face.

"The numbness then spreads to your fingers and toes, you feel sick, and you lose use of your motor functions. Eventually you'd suffer respiratory failure."

Viscardi advises anyone who thinks they're suffering from PSP to get to a hospital. "If you can feel it starting, you want to be near a respirator. The state department of food and drug should be notified immediately."

A person who survives the first 24-hours of sickness will probably live to tell the tale, but as of yet no treatment for PSP has been discovered.

The first outbreak (bloom) of red tide in Massachusetts occurred in 1972, when 26 persons were poisoned. There were ten additional instances of PSP in 1974, but none since that time. None have been fatal.

From 1793 to 1977, there were 754 cases of PSP recorded in the United States and Canada, 143 of which were fatal. Only around 200 other cases (28 fatal) were recorded in other parts of the world from 1827 to 1973. Red tide blooms have appeared at one time or another in all parts of the world.

While scientists know what red tide is and the harm it can do, they haven't quite pinned down how it generates and how its life-cycle works. They can identify tides when they arrive, but they don't yet know for certain why the dinoflagellate congregate, how quickly and where they will spread, or how long they will last.

One theory suggests that certain favorable conditions and factors can bring about a tide. These are: a large amount of rainfall, which carries nutrients in run-off from the land into the ocean (lowering the ocean's salinity); an increase in the nutrients in run-off and sewage effluent seeping into the ocean; sunshine and low winds, which warms the water, promoting growth; ensuing onshore winds to move blooms towards shore; and if dinoflagellates die, they release oxygen-consuming toxins which can result in fish dying and adding to nutrients in the water.

As far as the current outbreak is concerned, levels in Maine (where the current tide gathered and spread from) are higher than any previous tide, reaching up over 900 micrograms per gram of meat. The bloom swept rapidly down the Atlantic coast and is now making its way down the Cape Cod Canal.

While levels in the Scituate, Cohasset, Marshfield area are now around 200, Viscardi pointed out that levels in Maine continued to rise for two to three weeks after they were first detected. It is impossible to say if levels here will follow suit, or just how long the tide will be present.

The most optimistic estimates for the tide's departure are two to three weeks, but if favorable conditions persist, the shellfish ban could conceivably last through the summer.

Record attendance at Town Meeting

voters $60,000 was expended last year to legal counsel for decisions that were appealed in court. Sections of the zoning bylaw had been labeled ambiguous by an appeals court judge, he explained.

Article seven, requesting revision to the setback requirement, was approved by a two-thirds vote, as was article eight. The latter article requested a change in the zoning bylaw table of area regulations. No objection was heard from the audience after a concise explaination by chairman Cotton.

Selectmen chairman Mitman requested that article 31, by a recommendation from Town Accountant Signorelli, be forwarded on the warrant review. This article requested $97,602 from available funds to pay for several 1984 budget deficiencies. According to selectman Rocco Laugelle, $6000 was needed for the selectmen's account, collective bargaining and professional service; $6224 for assessors to revalue real estate and contract service; $17,000 for town counsel and legal expenses; $10,830 for insurance, general expenses and workers' compensation; $9000 for fire, personal services and overtime account; $5800 for highways, street lighting and streets lights; $16,000 for landfill, general expenses and cover materials; and $21,548 for the town's debt service, interest and tax anticipation loans.

Advisory Committee Chairman Jim Lagrotteria said that board approved the request, and added that despite continual scrutiny by the advisors,"many of the deficiencies are in subjects not under our immediate control such as street lighting, insurance and legal costs."

Speaking about legal expenditures, Lagrotteria stunned the audience by saying that Cohasset has averaged since January, one lawsuit against the town per day. Although many of the complaints are immediately dismissed in court, "it's a far cry from the day when neighbors sat down and worked things out amicably," he added.

Although there was lengthy debate on the merits of the request, town meeting finally approved a $8100 request to renovate the exterior of the former North Cohasset fire station. The generous mood of the voters continued onto the following article, with approval of an $8000 appropriation to renovate the Bates Building for the expanded use of the facility by multiple town committees and boards.

Articles 19,20,21 and 22 were personnel classification revisions which were approved without much debate. Article 23 requested $6333 to be appropriated (and $4750 to be transfered) for an additional clerical position in the Building Inspector's office. The secretary would be utilized in that office by several town supervisors and committees.

As advisor Galt Grant noted, "whether we like it or not, we voted in an executive secretary and a five-member board of selectmen. For better or worse, we have more government, so we need more administrative staff, and we need more clerical staff."

The meeting was adjourned following approval of that article.

"Mud Day" at Center

Pre-kindergarten students at the Cohasset Community Center Nursery School recently participated in their annual "mud day" celebration.

This event is a favorite with the children, who come to school in their oldest clothes, and make big batches of squishy mud! They make mud pies and cakes to take home, take off shoes and socks and feel the mud with their feet, and make muddy foot-and-handprints for display.

The books "Piggy In The Puddle" and "The Little Boy Who Loved Dirt and Almost Became a Superslob" are shared at story time. The children even make "mud pudding" (really instant chocolate pudding!) to eat at snack time!

The Community Center Nursery School has been in operation since 1952, providing a high quality program in early childhood education. A few openings remain for the 1984-85 year, for two mornings per week. Information is available from the Director, Mrs. Sandra Putnam at 383-0036 during the morning hours.

A summer mini-camp for preschoolers, Camp Quonahasit, will be offered for two week sessions beginning the first week in July. Choice of two, three or five days per week is available, and children will participate in a variety of activities, concentrating on outdoor play and the development of gross motor skills.

Children must be three years old before June 1 to attend. For enrollment information call Mrs. Putnam at the above number or at 545-3002 after 3 p.m. Space is limited to 13 children per day, and parents are encouraged to enroll as soon as possible.

Superintendent discusses school finances and goals

important for them to have this time to relax."

School finances

Proposition 2 1/2 is not Crowell's favorite subject. Most of his fellow professional educators would agree with his assessment, that this price of legislation "set public education back 10-15 years." In fact, he adds, the only positive element achieved by Prop. 2 1/2 was that it forced all educators and administrators to excel to their highest limit.

Crowell also acknowledges that the basis of Prop. 2 1/2 was basically correct; a revolution against the regressive property tax. But that battle was won at the mercy of "the boys and girls of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts," he says.

Through this legislation, the inequity of education in Massachusetts has been broadened, with poorer, larger communities such as Quincy, Fall River and New Bedford bearing the brunt of teacher cuts and budget bludgeoning.

Crowell witnessed the elimination of many important programs in sports, music and humanities. "These programs were cut and left to creep back through the support of interested parents. They've helped bail us out, but many programs are still lost," he says. Money is running out of the junior high school sports program, there is still no marching band, and over the past four years, 42 staff positions, including 21 teachers have been permanently stricken from the system.

Another casualty of that wide-sweeping legislation, in the view of the superintendent, is that young people are turning away from the teaching profession. "There are so many fine teachers leaving their careers for private industry. The future looks more attractive there," he says. "Now, there is a teacher shortage in math and the high sciences such as physics, biology and chemistry."

Deferred maintenance of school buildings is the nightmare created by annual deficit funding, Crowell adds. Faced with the prospect of chopping necessary educational programs and teachers, or ignoring the failing roofs of a school, most educators would opt for the latter. Such was the case in Cohasset, until residents were confronted without a choice this year -the roofs at the Deer Hill and high school had reached the point of no return.

To Crowell's mind, this budgeting methodology is "penny wise and pound foolish."

If one of our largest investments as a taxpayer is our school buildings, then we shouldn't let them deteriorate inside and out. Besides the financial concern, we also run the risk of a safety hazard," he adds.

In summation, Cohasset is not in as bad shape as many other Massachusetts school systems. The schools have weathered the turmoil of limited funding, but the basic education offered in this community is comparable to any in the state, Crowell proudly says.

He is cautiously hopeful that House Bill 5704, labeled the Education Reform bill, will provide some financial relief to those school systems hardest hit by reduced spending. There are many items within the proposed legislation that Crowell takes issue with, but he agrees with its basic premise to equalize education opportunities throughout the Commonwealth.

"It's a step in the right direction, as long as it is well thought out. Right now, it hasn't been," he says.

1985 goals

Always the organizer, Supt. Crowell carries a list of several goals he has set for himself and the school system in the next year. Among the items he would like to see achieved in 1985 are:

the successful completion in the fall of the $1/2 million school roof repairs.

the continuation of the second phase of the Curriculum Update Program.

the development of the long range plan for computer implementation in grades 4-12, with goals, objectives and curriculum scope defined.

the construction of a fully equipped cable and radio station within the high school and the adoption of a policy guide for the utilization of cable television within the school system.

the solution of the elementary class size question. A problem, he admits, in most school systems. There are many variables adding to the complexity of the problem, Crowell notes, such as teacher contract stipulations, the repair and painting of the Osgood School windows and trim, estimated at $15,000.

continuation of the on-going masonry and repointing work being completed at the junior high school building, later to be completed at the Osgood School.

preparation of the teacher and secretarial contract for review by September.

Although not in a prioritized list, Crowell says these are among his more immediate goals.

And despite the frustrations that arise when such goals are unrealized because of inadequate funding or support, the superintendent emphasizes that above all, "education is still fun. There is nothing more rewarding than dealing with the development of our greatest natural resource," he says. "I'll never be sorry I made this my profession. These students do so many fabulous things. It keeps you young. That's why I'm not even considering retirement. The challenge is still there."

Cohasset ambulance study committee report

(This is more of the Cohasset Ambulance Study Committee's report to Selectmen.—Ed.)

SECTION III: STATISTICAL REPORT

In an effort to gain greater understanding of the Cohasset Fire Department Ambulance Service, the committee reviewed written logs, documents and reports kept in the Fire Department relating to the Ambulance Service. Members of the Committee reviewed the main Fire Department log which contained information regarding overall activities of the Fire Department including those of an emergency medical services nature. The way in which information is documented in the Fire Department log made it an impossible task to collect, compile and analyze data relevant to requests for first aid only without ambulance transport and the amount and extent of overtime used when the ambulance went into service on a call. Members of the Committee also reviewed a small number of Ambulance Service incident reports which are generated on each patient transported and which contain the Ambulance Service medical record and administrative data concerning the ambulance trip.

For the purpose of this report, members of the Committee collected data for the statistical review of the Ambulance Service for 1982 and 1983 from the Ambulance Log Record Book. Information contained in the Ambulance Log pertained to those calls for emergency medical services in which the patient/patients were transported to a facility for medical evaluation and care. This log did not contain information regarding those persons who received first aid at the fire station or at the scene but who weren't transported to a medical facility. No data were readily available to review the frequency and type of response by surrounding towns to Cohasset's requests for mutual aid ambulance service.

The following were collected from the Ambulance Log: incident number, street address of location of patient, date, person requesting help, destination, type of care given, diagnosis, time of call, time ambulance left scene, time ambulance arrived at hospital and time ambulance was back in service. These data were then coded, entered into a computer and analyzed for frequency distribution. It must be noted that on a number of occasions complete data on each incident was not recorded in the Log and thus was identified as missing data under the appropriate code for the computer.

It must be acknowledged that expert computer programming consultation and the use of computer time was donated free of charge to the town of Cohasset.

VOLUME OF CALLS

During the year 1982 there were 316 persons transported by ambulance to medical facilities. In 9 instances of motor vehicle accidents two persons were transported together, while in 1 instance three persons were transported together. Thus, in 1982 there were a total of 306 ambulance transport runs.

During 1983, 312 persons were transported. There were 11 instances where two persons were transported together, 2 instances where three persons were transported and one instance in which four persons were transported together. Thus in 1983 there were a total of 298 ambulance transport runs.

For 1982 and 1983 there were a total of 628 patients transported with the ambulance making 604 transport runs.

TIME OF CALL REQUESTING AMBULANCE SERVICE

A review of the Log indicated that all recording of times were noted in AM and PM sequences which required recoding to a 0000 to 2400 system prior to entering the data into the computer.

Approximately one-third of all requests for ambulance service came from the Police Department. Without an analysis of Police Department logs it can not be identified how many incidents resulted from the police being the first on the scene and how many resulted from the initial call for help going to the Police Department.

LOCATION OF CALLS

All streets in Cohasset were organized into six geographical areas for the purpose of analyzing the location sites. Calls for mutual aid from surrounding towns were grouped according to town of origin, specifically, Scituate, Hingham and Hull. The Cohasset areas identified were: Beechwood, Ledgewood, Veterans' Area, Village Harbor, North Main-Jerusalem, and Forest Ave-West Corner.

Of the 628 patients transported, there were indications of the geographic location of the call in 626 of those cases. The rank order of frequency of geographic location of calls is: one, Village Harbor; two, Veterans' area; three, Ledgewood; four, North Main-Jerusalem Rd.; five, Beechwood; six, Scituate; seven, Forest Ave-West Corner; eight, Hingham; and nine, Hull.

DESTINATION OF AMBULANCE

The distination of ambulance runs were classified, analyzed and rank ordered according to frequency: South Shore Hospital, 539; 3A Medical Center, 37; All other hospitals, 23; Cohasset MD's, 12; Quincy City Hospital, seven; MD outside of Cohasset, three; Refused treatment, one; and Not transported (DOA), one.

Everyone belongs to the Celtics family

By Lois Martin

Civilization as we know it has survived the Lakers-Celtics War.

That wasn't easy. Never mind the players. They're trained for this battle. They get big bucks for wearing short shorts. They are survivors.

It was the fans I worried about, never mind family units where the slightest remark favoring Kareem could trigger either adoptive or divorce proceedings.

It was their health about which I was most concerned. True, the players had to run up and down the floor incessantly. But the spectators—and everyone was one of those unless she was drugged or unless he was incarcerated—had to sustain a screaming, armwaving frenzy for three hours a game. That's 21 hours of hysterical behavior and it doesn't include the pre-game jitters, the recovery time after losses or the anxiety of replay sessions.

PATCHES

A couple of weeks ago I attended a shower wherein two young women from the Mariner were being feted because they're getting married.

The large room was filled with gentle women, who appropriately 'oohhed' and "aahhed' as each gift was opened. They, with old world charm, made a traditional bouquet of the ribbons on the packages, and they contributed well-mannered comments on each gift proffered.

Then, one by one, about eight of them drifted into the next room as soon as courtesy allowed, to let loose their support on the Celtics in one of the earlier encounters.

In that family room, these same women unsmocked their verbiage and became what they have been these weeks — fans. Here are the comments that were emoted (this is a family newspaper and expletives considered untoward have been deleted):

"Parish has done nothing but drop the ball."
"I'll take Magic."
"I'll take Kareem."
"They ought to raise the bucket two feet more for those guys."
"Shoot! They've got to shoot even if they miss. He's not shooting. Hemorrhoids, maybe."
"Awww-Right!"
"Woooo-Hoooo." (basket scored, Celtics)
"They're killing us with that defense."
"That's the trickiest player I've seen. Watch him."
"Physical. They're all very physical."
"They're not gonna make it."
"Don't say that!"
"Go, Larry."
"You can't go to L.A. two down."
"Forget it. Foul!"
"AWW-Right!"

I was worried about them all night. But the next morning they were all at work, rehashing each play over coffee.

What happened to bridge? Where are the women who used decorum in sports?

Gone, I tell you, gone.

I was talking with a grandmother last week who had confessed to her grandson that she liked Kareem. So he, forgiving her, stood in line for that basketball giant's autograph. As he approached, the Super Star said, "I'm sorry, son, but my time's up for signing."

The brash Celtics devotee said, "That's okay, I didn't want your autograph anyway. It's for my grandmother. She's the one who likes you."

She now has a personalized signature from Kareem.

I have marveled that police haven't been summoned to our house on warmish nights when neighbors could hear the screaming and hollering and floor pounding coming from where a group of near violent spectators watched the Celtics game. No one is more physical than the fans. Each play is absorbed, countered, dissected and then whooped about.

Just before Game 7 during a quiet dinner in Boston, a chic looking foursome discussed the upcoming showdown: "We've gotta get to work on the refs early and let them know where they are."

Those games really aren't played in Boston Garden. They are battled in every bar, every home from here to L.A.

And it's all so personal. Apparently Dick Stockton made a remark about Blue-collared Boston versus limousine L.A.

Well, that set 'em off. It wouldn't have surprised me to see high-toned executives rip off white Oxford shirts to put on Saturday-blue denims just to show Stockton where they stood.

The fans are an amalgamation of America. Only they all live, for the duration of the war, in Boston. The most affluent and the least sit elbow to elbow in the Garden, roaring the language they share in getting the Celtics through the game. There is no generation gap among Celtics fans, no disparity on religious, political, social or economic issues.

Only the Celtics.

Now it's over. Fans are slowly being depressurized so as to be able to function again in the world they knew before they fought the war.

They won. It's over.

AWWW Right!

Angler's corner

By George Doucette

Catch yourself some golden native shiners and you may catch a largemouth bass. By using bread and a small hook, you can catch this great bass bait in ponds in this area. Six inch to 8" size shiners are your best bet for a big largemouth in June. The reason for the shiners popularity is the natural dislike largemouth's have for them. Bass are coming off their spring spawn beds and are feeding heavily, and the native golden shiner is eating bass eggs.

Recently, while fishing Monponsett Lake, Dave George and I had the good fortune of using golden shiners. We were looking for that one big lunker. By trolling the weed line along the shallows, we hoped a large fish would spook the two shiners 50 feet behind the boat. It happened suddenly! The rod jerked, we stopped the boat and a line shot off into the lily pads.

This is the tough time, waiting. It takes a bass a few minutes to swallow the bait. Dave jerked the rod high in the air to set the hook. Nothing! The shiner comes in all chewed and missing scales. Several times in five hours, this type of thing happened to both of us.

Finally, Dave and I decided to fish an area with floats and shiners. Casting a shiner deep into lily pads, I waited with baited breath. Not for long. Slam!—the bait is hit and line peels off the reel as the huge bass rips off into the high grass and weeds. Lightly, I take up slack in the 20 lb. test line and wait, this time a good five minutes.

With all the strength I have, the hook is set and the monster is on. Somewhere in Monponsett Lake, a huge record fish is still waiting for you, as my 20 lb. test line was not enough. He snapped it like sewing thread with one shake of his football sized head. I will dream of that moment long after I have stopped telling the story.

"But I will be back again to fish for big bass with the native Golden Shiner."

Adams Sports & Tackle on Rte. 139, Pembroke, is holding a Fishing Clinic and fresh water Fishing Derby on July 6, 7, and 8. Men, women, and kids divisions are open to all who register. There are trophies and prizes for the winners.

July 4 deadline

Here are our plans for the July 4th issue of the Mariner.

The deadline for all advertising and copy for that holiday issue must be at the Mariner office, 58 Main St., P.O. Box 682, Marshfield 02050, by Friday, June 29 at 2 p.m.

The staff will work throughout the weekend to get the papers to press one day early...

...That will mean we will be out flagwaving on the Fourth, picnicking, swimming and celebrating with the rest of you.

from the kitchen

by Joan Pinkham

The hottest question of the week is: how to keep cool while eating properly. With this in mind I spoke with Jan O'Brien, Hanover selectman, now campaigning for state representative. There are six sitting down to dinner these hot nights and she gives a lot of credit to their daughters, Julie, Amy, Suzanne and Margaret, all of whom like to cook. Since they acquired a Chinese wok, they have shifted from outdoor grille cooking to the quick, nourishing meals afforded by this means. Jan has an herb garden and her husband, John, a vegetable garden that provides cukes, celery, swiss chard, tomatoes and lettuce, veggies that lend themselves to this method of top-of-the-stove cooking when it's too hot for an oven meal. Pea-pods and mushrooms are other stir-fry vegetables that may be added to strips of pork, chicken or beef that have been quickly fried in peanut oil. The method of cooking is simple, for when a drop of water sizzles in the oil that coats the pan, it's time to add the meat to be cooked covered until almost done. The vegetables are added and stir fried with the cover off and soy sauce, white wine or dry sherry may be added later, with cornstarch mixed with water for thickening. Jan used to teach French cooking, so, as with politics, she knows what she's talking about!

Despite this season's abundant charms—fields of daisies, pink peonies and blue delphiniums peeking over white picket fences and our beckoning beaches, we can't eat the scenery. Solid sustenance is called for even when we'd much rather devote the days to just admiring June's many charms. There was no time for that sort of thing last Wednesday at the Hanover home of Selectman Don Deluse where members of the Women's Club were arriving with their offerings for their annual June luncheon and later that night the family would gather to celebrate his birthday. For three generations now, potato pancakes, a traditional German dish, are always served. Together with their children, Mark, Andrea and Laura, the birthday dinner they would enjoy would include steak cooked on the grille and a salad, together with these

POTATO PANCAKES

5 lb. potatoes, put through the meat grinder and drained
2 medium-sized onions, also ground up
Mix together and add approx.
1 c. flour or Bisquick
Salt to taste
4 eggs

Combine ingredients and warm a griddle containing approximately half an inch of oil. Oil will probably need to be replenished during cooking period. When cooked on both sides until browned, drain pancakes on brown paper bag.

* * *

While year-and-a-half old Katie Lunetta plunked away on grandma's piano providing background music, we were treated to two favorite recipes of John Lingley's family. According to Hanover's police chief's wife, even the hot weather doesn't diminish his appetite much. Together with Katie's Mom, Melissa and the Lingley's other daughter, Kristen, this is a family favorite they all enjoy called

THREE BEAN SALAD

1 can each (8 oz.) of lima, red kidney and green string beans
1 medium onion sliced thin in rings

Drain beans and rinse with cold water and place in large bowl with onion. In a covered container, mix the following:

2/3 c. vinegar
1/2 c. salad oil
1/4 c. sugar
1 tsp. celery seed

Pour dressing over beans and onion. Stir lightly, cover and refrigerate. This salad is best when prepared early in the morning and so is well marinated.

* * *

Another Lingley family favorite is this most unusual recipe which when served with a salad makes a filling meal. If you can find small bread sticks, it might serve as an appetizer. Debbie Newhall, their niece, calls it simply:

HAM ON A STICK

1 lb. boiled ham
1 container of whipped cream cheese
1 pkg. bread sticks

Spread cheese on each slice of ham. Wrap around bread sticks so they look like a popsicle. That's it!

Just a reminder from my kitchen to yours, that we welcome your recipes, suggestions and thoughts on the fascinating subject of eating.

Musings

By John H. Cutler

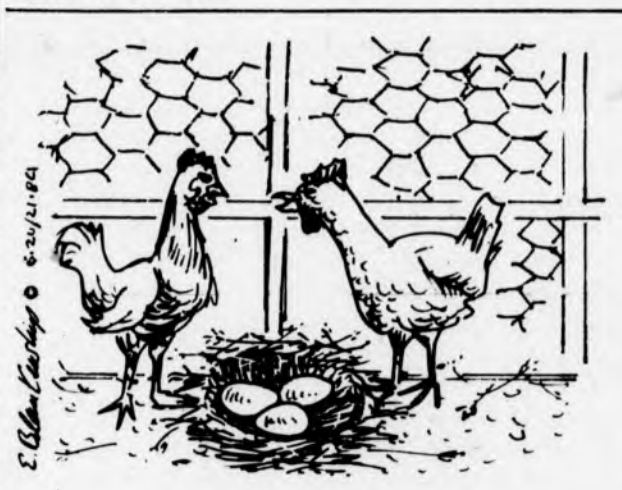
☐ The measure of a democracy is the measure of the freedom of its humblest citizen.
—John Galsworthy said it.

☐ The most important job Congress has is how to get money from the taxpayer without disturbing the voter.

☐ Although others get credit for the remark, it was Bruce Barton who first said, "Conceit is God's gift to little men." and it was Bulwer-Lytton, not Harry Truman, who first said, "Everyone has a right to be conceited until he is successful."

☐ What 5-letter word is pronounced the same way when the last 4 letters are removed? I won't give you a cue, but I'll give you the answer: QUEUE.

☐ Newspapers are the No. one advertising medium in the U.S.



☐ It's all right to use cliches as long as they've never been used before.

☐ Remember the old definition of a Bostonian? One who reads the Boston Transcript, owns Boston & Albany stock, and has a relative in McLean's.

☐ When Mrs. Noah Webster walked into the parlor and saw her husband kissing the chambermaid, she said, " Why, Noah, I am surprised," "No, my dear," said Noah, "you are astonished. We are surprised."

☐ When anger rises think of the consequences. One of the easiest things to do is to start an argument; one of the hardest things to do is to stop one. How do you define an argument? An argument is where two people are trying to get the last word in first.

SS Conservatory will offer new summer programs

The South Shore Conservatory in Hingham will offer several new programs this summer for children and adults. They are specially designed for the vacation period to enliven and enrich the summer season.

YOUNG STRINGS is designed to encourage young students of violin, viola, cello or bass viol in orchestra and ensemble playing. One year of experience is necessary to join this program. Deborah Trudeau (M.M. in violin performance from The New England Conservatory), a highly qualified teacher and professional violinist, will be the instructor. She will work on technical problems, sight reading and ensemble skills. The groups will meet on Monday afternoons.

This summer the Conservatory will offer a band program three mornings a week for fourth through sixth graders who play brass, woodwind or percussion instruments (one year of experience necessary). It will be called THE CEDAR HILL BAND and will be under the direction of music specialist, Lydia Fritze (B.M.Ed. Lowel State). She has taught chorus, band and general music in the Marshfield schools for the past 10 years. Gifted in teaching young band members, she and her school group of 100 students had the honor of being invited to play at the Cherry Blossom Festival in Washington, D.C., in 1980. The Cedar Hill Band will be at the Conservatory during the same time as the Summer Wind Ensemble, the school's well known program for high school students. This proximity to some of the most talented young musicians on the South Shore will be an incentive for the younger group.

MEGA-JOY is an addition to the popular Joy of Music program, which is the Orff method of introducing young children three to six years-old to music. This new class is for eight to 10 year-olds, who have had little or no experience with music. Janice Ripley (M.M.Ed Indiana University), who specializes in early childhood music training, will focus on ensemble playing with the special Orff instruments. The students will play together and also accompany each other in song and movement to improve coordination, rhythm and inner hearing.

POPS and BROADWAY is the name Marilyn Brown has given her summer piano groups. Students of all ages will be formed into duets, trios and quartet combinations according to ability. They will work on lighter music such as jazz pieces, popular and light classical music...a good summer addition or substitute for the formal lessons which will keep up pianistic skills, improve sight reading and provide the enjoyment of playing with others. One year of piano lessons is required. Ms. Brown holds a B.M. in Piano Performance from Southern Illinois University.

The Conservatory offers these and many other summer lessons. For further information and a free brochure, call the office at 749-7565. The Conservatory is a non profit community school of the arts and is funded in part by the Mass. Council on the Arts and Humanities.

Cast for Young People's Theatre listed

The Young People's Summer Theatre completed casting for its 1984 musical, "On the Twentieth Century."

With little discussion and no opposition, town meeting voters Tuesday night approved a $50,000 appropriation for the purchase of a new Fire Department ambulance.

Selectman John DeBassio explained that the current ambulance is a 1976 model that is in constant need of repair. In fact, he noted, it is probably off the road for repairs more often than it is used.

The current ambulance has also been cited for violations by the state Office of Emergency Medical Services, he added.

The advisory board members agreed the ambulance is a necessary aquisition this year and noted that the vehicle has more than 72,000 miles and is called an average of once a day.

Roy Fitzsimmons, chairman of the town's Ambulance Study Committee, urged passage of the appropriation. When committee members looked closely last fall at the current vehicle, they noticed cracks in the fiberglass in the rear, and there were fumes eminating from the exhaust.

The chairman recommended the purchase be approved, but said he endorsed the formation of a citizens' Emergency Medical Services Committee to lend opinions as to the type of ambulance and equipment to be acquired. With that addition, the study committee supported the article, Fitzsimmons said.

MORTGAGE UPDATE. The more we learn about mortgage loans, the more we appreciate the need to talk to experts when arranging financing. Last week we sat in on a seminar our Northern Mortgage Company was holding for their associates to review some of the "newer" programs. They discussed "One Year Capped ARM's"; "Step EOM's"; "Convertible 3 Year ARM-N.O.O."; "15 Year Fixed"; and the list went on. The idea is not to alarm you, but to inform you of the fact that there are a variety of ways to finance a home purchase and of which will work best for your circumstances. If we can't answer you questions at our local Conway office we can quickly get the answer through our experts at Northern.

Town investigates cause of Atlantic Avenue blast

Mud splattered over the Russell home at 105 Atlantic Avenue when an explosion ripped through ledge during water main construction. Windows were smashed by large rocks that were propelled from the blast. (Joann Biviano photo)

By Jane Lane

The owner of the home hit by debris from a blast along Atlantic Avenue is pondering a negligence suit against the construction company. And town officials and the state fire marshall's office are wondering what caused the mishap.

All blasting work connected with the water, main construction along Atlantic Avenue temporarily ceased after Monday morning's accident. But a new permit was issued later that day and the dynamite blasting continued Tuesday morning.

The blast which resounded throughout the residential neighborhood at 7:30 a.m. Monday will be not be the last heard in Cohasset although all investigations are not complete.

While the Michael Russell family was still asleep, a blast intended to break through rocky ledge along Atlantic Avenue sent large pieces of stone through their home. Windows were shattered, with gaping holes perferated by the foot-long jagged rocks.

The roof was punctured in two areas by large rocks which were sent flying into the air by the underground explosion. Tree limbs were left scattered along the driveway in front of the residence, and a stockade fence lining the yard was damaged.

Police Officer Lawrence Ainslie was at the scene at the time of the explosion. While on routine patrol, Ainslie walked up to the construction workers at the site. Without warning, a blast was ignited, completely to the officer's surprise.

"I had no idea they were about to blast. No one said anything to me to get out of the way.," Ainslie said. "They couldn't have been following procedure. I've seen blasting done before, but this went off like a bomb. The entire blast could not have been covered. Rocks and mud were flying everywhere."

The mat used to cover the blasting area was made of a rubbertire material. A steel covering is often used in blasting explosions, according to Ainslie and Fire Capt. Mark Trask.

The officer continued, "I screamed for them to stop while I ran to the Russell's house to make sure everyone was okay. I radioed for the fire department. No one was injured in the home - I was surprised. What a mess the street was. I think that blast stunned the workers too. It looked like a bomb - like a war."

Mrs. Russell was assisted by several neighbors soon after the explosion. Still upset hours after the blast, she was unable to talk at length about the incident.

She did say the blasting has been a constant source of worry for her family, and they had expressed their concern to the construction supervisors several times in the past weeks.

As firefighters surveyed the damage and covered the holes atop the roof in the soaking rain, the Russell family gathered within the two-story structure.

Fire Capt. Trask, who arrived at the scene shortly after the explosion, said Geneva Construction Co. had a permit which expired that morning, to use dynamite to blast the Atlantic Avenue ledge. When used by a competent person in a controlled environment, dynamite is a permitted method to blast rock within a residential neighborhood, he said.

Poll hours

The polls at Town Hall will be open Saturday, June 30, from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m.

The only race to be decided in this special runoff election is for selectman, between candidates Doris Golden and Mary Jane McArthur.

Friday, June 29 at 1 p.m. is the cutoff date for all residents wishing to vote absentee. Anyone requesting an absentee ballot may do so at the Town Clerk's office.

Special absentee voting hours were put into effect for the special election. Residents may vote absentee tonight at the Town Clerk's office from 5:30 to 8.

According to Town Clerk Frances Marks, there have been a heavy number of absentee ballots already cast for Saturday's election.

Hazardous waste—an educational process

By Jeff Giles

Too many people have the wrong attitude about hazardous wastes in Cohasset. If you bury your motor oil in the backyard or bring your oil-based paints to the dump, you could be one of them.

Too many people believe only the large chemical firms threaten the environment. In fact, many minds have been made up that everyday household disposal of wastes is far from a pressing concern.

Jeff Bettinger and the Harzardous Materials Advisory Committee are trying to change some of those minds.

The Committee was created in February, 1983 by the Board of Health in an effort to provide a knowledgeable and responsible source of information and advice on matters involving harzardous wastes. Among other things, the committee was charged with "preparing a plan of response to spills of dangerous substances" and "formulating a plan to protect the groundwater of the town."

But more than anything else, the committee's first goal was to educate itself through any and all available sources such as workshops, literature, and the example of similar boards in other towns such as Hingham and Hanover. Bettinger, the committee's chairman, is a chemical engineer with Stone and Webster whose interest in water and waste treatment began in college.

Still, he is the first to admit that trying to establish a new committee has convinced many of the members that they all had a lot to learn. Originally, the group was to include representatives from seven town boards along with three citizens who expressed interest and concern in the town's management of hazardous materials. Although the structure of the Committee is somewhat less formal now, Bettinger is genuinely excited about the interaction and progress of his co-workers.

Representing the Board of Health, the Fire Department, the Conservation Commission, and the Water Commission, on the Committee, respectively, are Barbara Kern, Martin Dooley, Merle Brown, and Lot Bates. The Police Department has yet to provide an active member.

Even with more than a year behind the committee, chairman Bettinger finds it difficult to "whip up enthusiasm" and public support. Because the committee's work is "preventative maintenance" rather than a response to a specific and immediate danger, he believes townspeople are slow to react.

"It's easy to remember to fix your car when it's making noise," Bettinger says. "It's a lot harder to remember to change the oil."

All committee meetings are open to the public, and Bettinger strongly urges all interested citizens to attend and express their concerns. To his disappointment, only two new members have been added since the Committee's creation.

Recently, the commitee has been working with the Water Commission in an effort to pass a watershed protection by-law which would protect the town's source of drinking water by regulating the storage of underground chemicals and carefully monitoring the lands which surround Lily Pond.

Bettinger cited Cohasset Heights landfill as a potential threat to the Pond should its legal capacity be abused. Committee-distributed questionnaires regarding the storage of hazardous materials in the town have had a fair response, but Bettinger feels certain that more follow-up research is needed in the near future.

At the moment, however, the committee's energies are concentrated on "Hazardous Materials Cleanup Day" which has been scheduled for September 22. That day, the town will provide a free disposal service for ordinary household products which are unsuitable for the town dump. Such products include: oil-based paints, thinners and solvents, garden pesticides, and motor oil.

Meet that deadline

We're getting ready for the Fourth!

The Mariner will publish right on target next week but in order to do that we must have all advertising copy and news information at the office 2 p.m., Friday, June 28.

We will push up our deadline to get the papers out in time to allow staff members to be among the celebrating flagwavers for Independence Day.

Cohasset's week . . .

New AFS program

AFS is no longer for students only. Jane Goedecke, President of the Cohasset AFS Chapter, announces a new adult exchange between Hanover, Germany and our local area.

Twenty representatives of Boston area chapters of AFS will be guests of German AFS families from September 9 to 29. October 15, twenty German adults will arrive to spend three weeks with host families in this area.

Similar to the student exchange programs, participants will live with families, visit area attractions, learn more about AFS and have free time to pursue their own interests. Host families will enjoy this opportunity to build friendships and experience our country through the eyes of a guest.

The program is open to anyone 18 years or older who has been involved with AFS in the past either as Chapter Member, Americans Abroad traveller, or their parents, or Host Family members.

Applications for either hosting or travelling to Germany are available from Jane Goedecke at 383-6935. Inquiries must be received by June 22.

Richardson talk

South Shore residents will meet with Ann Richardson of Brookline, national board chairman of Reading Is Fundamental (RIF) and a member of the President's Committee for the Employment of the Handicapped Tuesday, June 26, at 10 a.m. at the home of Polly Logan, 562 Main St., Hingham. Richardson's talk, "Reading—Fun and Profit," is open to the public.

In addition to speaking to groups across the country on the importance of reading, Richardson, a Radcliffe graduate, is also the present chairman of the community advisory board of Second Genesis, a low-cost rehabilitation and educational program to combat drug abuse. She is a past co-chairman of the Massachusetts Association for Mental Health Fund Drive and a former director of the Harvard Alumni Association.

Richardson is the wife of Elliott Richardson, Republican candidate for the U.S. Senate.

Assisting with the meeting are: Susan Pile, Penny Place and Florence Hitt of Cohasset; Joan Pelletier of Scituate; Mary Louise Kemp of Norwell; Jan Lydon of Marshfield; Margaret Balcom of Weymouth; Elaine Plakias of Westwood and Duxbury; and Mary Fitzmaurice, Gloria Jantzen, Edna English and Virginia Lewiecki of Hingham.

Cable regulations

The Massachusetts Cable Television Commission issued regulations requiring cable companies to pay interest on deposit money they receive from consumers.

The Cable Television Commission has consistently maintained the position cable companies are required to pay interest on consumer deposits, but a number of companies have contested this and refused to pay interest.

"This regulation will insure that cable consumers are protected," said Cable TV Commissioner Rosalind A. Niles. "While the collection of deposits is a valid business practice, the significant interests earned on these deposits should be returned to consumers."

In addition to requiring cable companies to pay seven percent interest semi-annually on all deposits held longer than six months, the new regulations contain the following features:

- Cable companies may choose to pay the interest directly to consumers or credit a subscriber's account.
- Cable companies must return the deposit plus accrued interest to the subscriber with 30 days of return or the converter.
- Cable companies may not require a deposit greater than $50 or the cost of the devices, whichever amount is less.

Volunteers needed

South Shore Elder Services of Cohasset is in need of volunteer drivers for home delivered meals in the Humarock-Scituate area. Please spend an hour or two with us helping an elderly neighbor. Call Sue Errichiello, Volunteer Coordinator at 383-9790.

School project workers

The Parent School Organization (PSO) is looking for a few good men and women to assist the school maintenance department with scraping, puttying, and painting at the Osgood School.

If you can spare a few hours in the cooler part of the day, please check in with Charlie Stover, painting foreman, any time after 6 a.m. until early afternoon. Bring your own scraper if possible.

Volunteering for a few hours will ease the burden on the maintenance crew and allow other important projects to be completed over the summer, while making the schools safer and more attractive.

Transportation area meeting

The Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority is sponsoring a Hingham-Scituate-Rockland-Cohasset-Hull Area Workshop Thursday, June 28, at 7 p.m. in the Hingham Town Office building, Small Barnes Auditorium, 7 East St., Hingham.

The workshop will discuss the mass transportation issues of the five communities, and the identification of the demand for services not being met.

The meeting's purpose will gather information for the Southeast Corridor Study now conducted by the Central Transportation Planning Staff.

Library seeks television

Librarian Dick Hayes is seeking a television set for the Paul Pratt Library, in order to begin a unique cable service for Cohasset library users.

The service is called Key Facts, and if Hayes is able to obtain a television, library users will be able to view 100 pages of continuous informational news on a daily basis. The magazine-type format will be available to the Paul Pratt Library alone, as part of the contract developed with American Cablesytems.

Key Facts will allow the viewer to watch updated information on sports, news, business, special features, book and film reviews. The program originates in Chicago, and there are few communities in the nation with the capability of receiving this special cable feature, Hays explained. There will be no sound involved in this cable program. A black and white television is acceptable, although color would be more appropriate, according to American Cablesystems Community Coordinator John Ronan.

American Cablesystems will wire and equip the library's television at no cost.

Anyone who would like to donate a television to the Paul Pratt Library should contact librarian Hayes.

We all know that the Caribbean was the first America in chronology, the first to be discovered, explored and settled. However, we tend to overlook the fact that it remained the first America in importance, wealth and influence for three centuries, half as long again as our period of constitutional existence. This aspect of the islands is one that the summer traveler is likely to explore. Those who go south mainly to escape our winters want sand, surf and a tan. Instead, take advantage of off-season prices to explore the islands' rich history. Visit the inland mills and plantations, churches and burial grounds, never seen by those who cling to the beaches.

Cohasset Conservation Trust

The Cohasset Conservation Trust would like to remind citizens of Cohasset that it is an active organization pursuing its basic purpose to help in the conservation and preservation of the natural beauty and resources of the town and to encourage the use of land in the public interest.

Bassing Beach at the entrance to Cohasset Harbor was acquired by the Trust some years ago and is enjoyed by many citizens of the town as is Bates Wharf and the Old Salt House in Cohasset Harbor which are other properties owned by the Trust.

Over the years the Trust has accepted land which is believed to be important to protect such as marshland, shorefront properties, and woodlands.

Many property owners might consider relieving themselves of the burden of paying taxes on land which could better become part of the Trust's holdings in addition to receiving a tax deduction for their gift.

The Chairman of the Board of Trustees is Chester Ellis. Other trustees are Charles Fink, Richard Leggat, Edward Long, Jack Hubbard, and Roger Porter.

More information can be obtained by contacting any one of the Trustees or by writing to Cohasset Conservation Trust, Box 314, Cohasset, MA 02025.

Cohasset bloodmobile a success

The Cohasset Community Bloodmobile held June 18 was an overwhelming success. The response to the Kay Gibbons Memorial Bloodmobile was greater than planned by either the Bloodmobile Committee or the Red Cross Staff. It was the largest turnout in many years.

The delay in processing donors was most embarrassing and is a tribute to those who patiently waited for longer periods than ever anticipated to give blood. Apologies are due for this uncontrollable delay because of the larger than expected turnout.

There were 90 advance appointments, and there were at least 60 walk-ins, many of whom were not able to stay. The exact total number of people who intended to give bood to this day is unknown.

There were actually 45 people who signed up the first hour (2:30 to 3:30) and 32 the second hour; an unbelievably high turnout.

One hundred and five pints of blood were actually collected from the 138 people who came in and signed up to stay. Some of these had to leave because of the excessively long delay. There were 12 first time donors, and 20 college students home on vacation among the donors.

Donors were from Norfolk Conveyor (11), South Shore Home Care (3), Seavey Engineering (1), Legion (1), Cohasset Teachers (1), Masons (2), Rotary (5), First Parish (11), St. Stephens (15), Second Congregational (6), St. Anthonys (50), and Independent (32).

Chairman Corinne Cahill wishes to thank all who participated either in volunteer services as donors in this tribute to Kay Gibbons, Past Blood Chairman and faithful volunteer.

Center funding

State Sen. Allan R. McKinnon announced an additional $44,000 in funding has been restored to the Senate Budget for the Talking Information Center in Marshfield.

This amount had been cut by the Ways and Means Committee and was restored recently by a floor amendment Sen. McKinnon made during the budget debate. Sen. McKinnon worked closely with Rep. Frank Hynes to secure this additional funding.

The center is associated with WATD in Marshfield and provides a radio reading program for the blind.

Town investigates blast

While firefighters continued to survey the area, debris from the blast fallout was left lying along the winding, narrow street.

As if a tornado had created such turmoil, a glass lantern remained over the front door, hanging by a wire. Small boulders were peculiar reminders of the incident - left lying among the rain-soaked grass.

"It looked just like a war movie," a bewildered Officer Ainslie stated.

Homeowner Russell said he has not yet had an estimate of the damage to his home, located a few feet from the narrow road. He said his car, parked in the driveway to the side of the house, had been pelted with small rocks during a blast last Friday. At that time he related his concern about the blasting to the construction workers at the site. Many of the workers do not speak English.

Selectmen were expected to discuss the Atlantic Avenue construction during their Wednesday night meeting.

Group hopes to educate town

The committee hopes to collect 385 gallons or $1,500 worth of hazardous materials.

Idealistically, the committee some day hopes to pass a hazardous material by-law which would efficiently address storage facilities throughout the town. Because of the opposition of special interest groups to such a by-law, Bettinger is less than optimistic.

The next meeting of the Hazardous Materials Advisory Committee will take place at the Water Department on King Street July 12 at 7:30 p.m. In the meantime, any interested parties are encouraged to contact chairman Bettinger.

A lot more help is still needed to make Cohasset a little smarter and a little safer.

Lew Crampton enters senate race

The race for Massachusetts' tenth congressional district seat took shape today as Lew Crampton officially announced his challenge against incumbent Gerry Studds. The 45-year-old Republican who was raised in Duxbury and Cohasset has been on the campaign trail since the end of March when he left his job as a top-level administrator at the Envrionmental Protection Agency in Washington.

Crampton's up-beat, optimistic speech which he delivered in Boston, Plymouth, New Bedford and Hyannis, focused on finding new approaches to deal with the challenges of the 1980s and challenged the effectiveness of the exclusionary politics of yesterday. Crampton emphasized the forging of coalitions between business, labor and government to solve public problems.

In the announcement Crampton noted that his goals of protecting New England's shoreline, preserving the environment, providing better educations for children and more meaningful jobs, reducing the national debt and lessening the threat of nuclear war are shared by most Americans. Crampton said where he separates himself from Studds is how to best go about achieving these objectives.

Crampton said, "the new realities of the 1980s mean that we must find new approaches to deal with the problems of post-industrial society. We clearly must look beyond the politics of yesterday to deal with the challenge of tomorrow. The days of 'government-knows-best' and 'big-government-knows-best-of-all' are over."

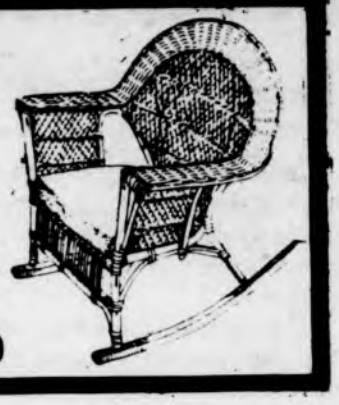
Crampton, who has spent the bulk of his career in public service, said "I can make a difference in Washington. My professional experience has given me the tools to do the job. And my personal commitment to the people of the tenth district will insure that I do the job well."

Crampton began his career as a consultant on political affairs in the People's Republic of China at the Rand Corporation. He then returned to Massachusetts to work in the Boston Model Cities Program and went on to become Commissioner of Massachusetts' Department of Community Affairs. He later worked as a special adviser to the state legislature to modernize the State Environmental Policy Act and to develop a new personnel system for legislative staff.

Later, Crampton worked as a research manager for Housing and Urban Development at Abt Associates and as a Senior Counsultant at the Arthur D. Little Company. He has most recently served as the Director of the Office of Management Systems and Evaulation at the EPA in Washington where he received several awards for his work in forging state and federal cooperation in protecting the environment.

Crampton received his BA with honors from Princeton University's Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs, an MA from Harvard University in East Asian Studies, and has done work in the doctoral program for Urban and Regional Planning at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Crampton and his wife, Kathleen, have three children, Perrine, Christopher and Kate.



Boat capacity

When you're shopping for a new boat, or operating one you own, be sure to pay attention to the U.S. Coast Guard capacity plate displayed near the operator's position.

The capacity plate states maximum recommended motor horsepower and load for the boat, and is required by federal law on monohull boats under 20 feet in length, with the exception of sailboats, canoes, kayaks, and inflatables.

A boat's length and beam alone are not necessarily a sufficient guide to power and load requirements. The figures on the capacity plate are obtained by taking into account such factors as hull shape and volume, empty weight, transom width and strength, bottom features, and maneuverability at high speed.

A conversation with the candidates

Doris Golden

Relaxing in her Bound Brook home, recently rebuilt after a fire ravaged it a four days before Christmas, Doris Golden admits that although it has been prolonged, this has been a campaign she has thoroughly enjoyed.

The people who have assisted her in the campaign, and the new friends and acquaintances she has met, have made this special election campaign "a wonderful time," she adds.

"I've had a marvelous committee. We've had our ups and downs recently, but we've risen above it. And it's been a fun campaign," she says. "It's difficult when the campaign is one-on-one. It's as if the town is split in half. I don't like that at all. But when this whole thing is over, we have to live with each other, see each other, and be friends with one another. That's the most important thing."

Opinion of the Ward sewer plan

"This town had to do something," Golden says. "It was a long time coming and now we have a decision that the majority voted for. I am very pleased that the Route 3A business people, I hope, will be taken care of. I hope that is followed through, and that they are happy with the results of their efforts."

Opinion of the difficulties within the Fire Department

"It's difficult for me to answer this question since I am not privvy to any inside information on this issue," Golden answers. "What I read now in the newspapers is that there have been long contract negotiations, but nothing is settled.

"Going back two years ago, Martin Dooley was appointed chief after several months of screening applicants for the position. It's always hard to bring in someone new to the job — there are always hurdles to overcome, a tug of war. I assume Chief Dooley is doing the best he can, and I think it's difficult for the fire fighters to do things they were not expected to do before. I see both points of view. But I won't base any decision on what I hear on the streets. I know from personal experience we have a good fire department. I couldn't speak more highly of our firefighters."

Do you feel there is a need for a town manager form of government in Cohasset?

According to Golden, "We have five selectmen now and I don't feel we have any less problems than when we had three. I feel there's probably more problems now than with the three-member board. I heard there has been an average of one lawsuit per day against the town since January. I think that tells us something loud and clear.

"I think the people elect selectmen to decide the issues. The executive secretary advises the board members. But I don't feel we need someone with more authority such as a town manager. If we did, we'd have to pay a greater salary, and I don't think it is warranted right now for this town."

If the town had an unlimited source of funds, where would you make the appropriations?

"I would like the money split between all the town departments. I don't mean expanding the police department to 100 officers. But I would like to have more cars and officers to patrol the areas where the coverage is warranted.

"I don't know the entire report issued by the Ambulance Study Committee, but I would also like to see their recommendations followed through," Golden adds.

"I would also like to see a new Town Hall and a new municipal garage facility constructed. I hate to see money being wasted on the West Corner building when the place is almost condemned. We need a central place to house our trucks and equipment, not a place that is falling apart.

"Cohasset has always been a wonderful place to raise children. But we forget about them when they become teens. I would love to help them out some way -have a type of community center just for them. I don't know the answer, but there must be something we can do for our kids.

"I know these are fantasies, but I'd love to see sidewalks constructed, and a bike path through town," she suggests.

Why should a Cohasset voter cast his ballot for you?

"I feel strongly that the rights of the individual must be preserved," Golden states. "In many ways our town is becoming a town of restrictions without merit - restrictions that are imposing physical and financial hardships on many individuals.

"There are many differences in my approach to government than my opponent," she continues. "First and foremost, I believe the people are the government and my role as selectman would be to guide and protect their well being through meaningful direction and leadership."

Golden adds, "dictatorial attitudes and government by intimidation and vascillation, and the endless red tape and road blocks will play no part in my attitude if I am selectman. I believe all residents have a right to be heard and treated with respect and dignity. As selectman, my outlook would be one of a positive nature. I would strive to resolve problems, not create them."

Should Cohasset be a no-growth town?

"No, it shouldn't. Growth should be in an orderly manner, working in coordination with the various town boards and committees. Norwell has done a beautiful job on Route 53. I would like the business growth along Route 3A to be done in an appealing fashion such as that," she says.

"We moved here 21 years ago, and the population was about 7000. You hate to see Cohasset grow, but you have to keep up with progress. I would like to see orderly growth, and I think our town boards are doing a fine job in that area. I just hope our residents will support the businesses that locate in our town, rather than go elsewhere."

What is the most critical issue in this campaign?

Golden comments with a smile, "to get the right candidate into office - me.

"The most fundamental issue is to get someone in that office who will get things done. To get this town moving forward. Let's get rid of some of those lawsuits and do the job right."

Mary Jane McArthur

This has been a long campaign for incumbent selectman Mary Jane McArthur. When the campaign first began in early spring, she was in the midst of the busiest season for municipal meetings.

While attending nightly sessions of budget preparations, committee hearings on the sewer plan, and various other town issues, McArthur had few spare moments to spend soliticing votes.

She waged a quiet campaign in April. Although her strategy has always been low key, McArthur has attempted to be more public in this renewed attempt for re-election. She vowed that change would occur if a special runoff election was declared.

Opinion of the Ward sewer plan?

"I voted for the Ward plan because I have always favored a regional solution to many of our problems. I can't see all these neighboring towns building multi-million dollar sewer plants. In this plan, we are helping Hull and they are helping us," McArthur answers.

"I was very concerned about meeting our discharge permit violation and we have solved that and avoided a costly fine by the state. My main concern right now is the continued pollution of our ground water. Because of the composition of our soil here, I believe many of the repairs to on-site systems will be temporary. I'm concerned about what will happen to our ground water if these systems fail.

"Hopefully, technology is going to advance and somewhere down the road there is going to surface a different method to take care of our wastewater; something we are not aware of at the present time," she adds.

Opinion of the difficulties within the Fire Department

"In a time of reorganization, it is reasonable to expect an unsettled period. For 28 years there was one administration and then two quick changes were made in less than a year," McArthur explains.

"In any new administration you have to expect new ideas and approaches. I think there has to be a firm commmitment by everyone that differences do exist and they will be dealt with open communication, mutual respect and understanding of all points of view.

"There is no clear cut decision to be made. The Board of Selectmen addresses each issue confronting the fire department on its own merit," she continues. "We have taken each grievance as it is presented to us without prejudice. We weigh the facts and make a decision based on our best judgment. Some of these decisions are in favor of the union, some in favor of the chief."

According to McArthur, "the Board of Selectmen should not be preceived as being pro-union or pro-administration. We weigh each issue as presented to us, and we render a decision based on those facts as presented to us."

Do you feel there is a need for a town manager form of government in Cohasset?

"Cohasset is not ready for this type of government at this point in time. But it is apparent that selectmen are spending a great deal of time dealing with problems that could be dealt with more effectively by someone in a position of authority," she says.

"Because government is becoming more complex, as time goes on, there is going to be more of a need to delegate more authority to our executive secretary. Whether we will eventually go to a town manager form of government - it's too early to say.

McArthur continues, "it may appear Cohasset has more problems than neighboring communities, but this isn't true. Our problems are not unique - surrounding towns are wrestling with the same things - public safety, transportation, education, and planning for an orderly growth.

"But all of Cohasset's problems are addressed in public because of the structure of our government. Whereas a town with an administrator or manager, many problems are taken care of by the administrator and are not discussed in a public forum," she adds.

"I believe very strongly that public hearings should be held on any townwide issue so all points of view are heard before a decision is rendered. The public hearing should be used more. Also, the enforcement of our rules, regulations and bylaws have too long been a lower priority than they should be. It is obvious that the longer inequities and violations are ignored, they will multiply. This Board of Selectmen is attempting to accomplish a fair enforcement of all town regulations," McArthur says. "The town has to realize there are many issues before the Board of Selectmen. Some are clear cut, some are complex. We need time to research and think out our decisions. It does not make sense to come to a hasty decision that resolves one problem and creates more."

If the town had an unlimited source of funds, where would you make the appropriations?

"The first thing I would do would be to build a modern town office facility," she quickly states. "We must bring all our town departments under one roof to help coordinate these departments in addressing problems. Being under one roof with all records and materials available, will go a long way to coordinating the solution to certain issues.

"I would also like to see a public works facility - a town garage. In the long run, it will more cost effective in the utilization of our equipment and manpower. I am not advocating a public works department. I simply would to have these related departments under one roof -the Highway, Tree and Park, and similar departments," she says.

"The other thing government has to do is to computerize our town records - not only the Town Clerk's records, but materials from other town departments," McArthur adds.

Why should a Cohasset voter cast his ballot for you?

"I have over 20 years experience in town government. I have served this town in many capacities and I know how town government operates. This long period of service to Cohasset is an indication of my dedication to the town. I do try and listen to people's problems, and I attempt to solve them in a manner which is going to result in the greatest good for the greatest number. I am interested in everyone's point of view," she comments.

Should Cohasset be a no-growth town?

"The growth of this town should be well-planned and orderly. I am concerned about preserving open space and concerned about the impact growth will have on our town services. But I am not opposed to growth. It has to be controlled and the town is doing a good job planning its growth and development. It's an on-going problem, but the town boards are doing a good job addressing the problems associated with development," she says.

What is the critical issue in this campaign?

"I don't feel this is any one critical issue in this campaign," McArthur states. "I have been a selectman since 1981. When I ran in 1981, I was concerned about the lack of policies and procedures, the lack of communication to the townspeople, and the lack of responsiveness to the townspeople. I felt I could improve these situations and I have done that with the help of my fellow selectmen.

"I have said this before, but I felt three years ago that selectmen must assume a role of leadership," McArthur continues, " not just to react to situations and problems, but to pro-act. In the past three years, many policies and procedures have been established by the board that have gone a long way toward dealing fairly and equitably with problems before it. Selectmen have made some difficult decisions, based on what we felt was in the interest of all the townspeople."

Some extraordinary events

Dick Stevens of Cohasset recently had a very special 40th birthday celebration. For many years now, Dick and his close friends have celebrated birthdays in a unique manner, complete with practical jokes and strange gifts, including a chicken and a pig.

This year, friend Peter Whitman surprised Dick by bringing along a guest, "Ruthie" the elephant. Ruthie made her appearance courtesy of East Coast Camel Co.

And May 11, Patrick Hurley was sworn in to the District Court bench at Dedham Court by Governor Michael Dukakis.

At a party to honor Hurley held at the Barker Tavern in Scituate, he was presented with several joke gifts. One strange gift included a flowered robe for the judge to wear in court during the warm summer months. He'll be sitting in Wrentham, Plymouth and Hingham courts, presumably without the flowered ensemble.

Editorial

Go vote!

We did it for the special town meeting last week, now we have to do again Saturday. Stop whatever else we're doing, and get out and vote.

What's to stop us ? Not in recent memory has there been such publicity and turmoil surrounding a municipal election.

And not in recent years has there been such a clear cut choice of candidates. Both selectman candidates, Doris Golden and Mary Jane McArthur, agree they are individuals who will serve this town in a separate and distinct manner.

We have to give credit to both these women for their tireless efforts these past many months. Doris, who many know to be an energetic lady, has pursued what she felt was her legal and moral right to its ultimate conclusion. She is a fine citizen and a person of endless determination.

Mary Jane is glad this campaign is terminating. Exhausted after a prolonged, often bitter campaign, she is eager to see its conclusion, and for the town to reunite behind its elected leaders. She is a person of refinement; objective, and eager to see this town achieve its goals.

Let's stop the behind-the-back whispering and innuendo. Face it, anyone who dares to run for elected office deserves better than petty ridicule. They deserve our attention and esteem for attempting what we fear to endeavor.

Right from the start, when three candidates were running for two positions on the Board of Selectmen, residents perceived this as a race between Doris and Mary Jane, with John DeBassio unopposed. Even John admitted his prediction of victory, saying that people envisioned this as an election between the two women.

That prediction was fulfilled, and now we have the final choice. Don't let this election divide the town. Simply cast your ballot for the candidate you feel will accomplish the most for Cohasset; who will listen to your concerns about this town.

And when this election is over and the final tally is complete, let's unite ourselves with our selectmen. Be it Doris or Mary Jane, let's strive for Cohasset's sake to put the past behind us and work toward a promising future.

Our thanks to both women who have displayed once again their deep concern for Cohasset. There will be no loser in this campaign. They are both honorable people who deserve our small effort to attend the polls this Saturday.

If that plea doesn't work - how about this?

Rumor has it that if there is another tie vote, or even a close race, Town Clerk Frances Marks will attempt a swan dive from her second story office window at Town Hall.

Now if that doesn't get the vote out, nothing will.

Get to those polls,

Saturday, 8 a.m.-6 p.m.

Public reacts to commuter boats

By Elisabeth Gorfinkle

Despite protests by South Shore boat commuters at an open meeting in Hingham Monday night, revised schedules for the boats will go into effect July 2, according to state officials.

Commuters also voiced many complaints about the service of the Gracious Lady, the first high-speed commuter boat to run between Hingham and Boston, in the heated 90-minute session.

The meeting, attended by about three dozen area residents, was chaired by four state officials who were seeking public reactions to their new plans for scheduling and subsidizing the boats.

MBTA Deputy Director of Operations Carla Karash explained the proposed changes were part of the second phase of the state's subsidized boat service. In March the first phase began, to provide an alternative to driving on the Southeast Expressway during reconstruction. The second phase is planned to carry commuters through November of 1985, when the expressway reconstruction should be completed.

The goals for the second phase of subsidy are to provide better off-peak service and an equitable subsidy plan for boat operators, said Anthony Kinahan, the MBTA's special assistant for program and budget.

"The major change we've made is attitudinal. We are looking at the service as a complete service and not just as a peak hour service," he said.

Kinahan said a formula had been devised based on the number of passengers riding on peak and off-peak boat runs. The state has decided only boatloads of fewer than 100 passengers will be subsidized. The smallest load that will qualify for subsidy is 20 passengers.

The subsidy, which amounts to $2.75 per missing passenger under 100, will be fixed until it is reviewed in December.

"I believe (the formula) also gives us some contractual control over non-peak trips we've had trouble with in the past with not departing on time," he added.

The schedule changes occur mainly during ofi-peak hours of arly afternoon and evening. And they include proposed runs for a fourth boat scheduled to begin service July 9.

The backup boat for the state, the Chimera, is being provided by Dana Goodell of Nahant, owner of the subsidized Dragonfish. He will be paid a $100-a-day fee for the boat to be available for one trip each way daily, plus acting as a "spare" boat for the other two subsidized vessels.

The commuters at the meeting were more concerned, however, with the state's not subsidizing the slower Nantascot than the changes in the system for the faster Dragonfish and Gracious Lady.

Speaking for about 20 Nantascot riders and crew members, Russell Sheerin of Hingham asked the MBTA to consider if the reliability of the slower boat makes it worthy of subsidy. The Nantascot, owned by William Spence of Hingham, has been running in all weathers and seasons for more than 20 years. It covers the Hingham-to-Boston run in an hour, as opposed to the high-speed boats' travel time of 30 minutes.

Sheerin said to the officials, "As I look at your schedule, the 5:05 departure of a boat like the Dragonfish will out-compete a boat like the Nantascot (scheduled to depart Boston at 5:20 p.m.)

"What are you going to do to subsidize that so that those of us who use that boat will continue to?"

The Nantascot's owner Spence said he expects to lose a third of his evening passengers to the new 5:05 run.

Kinahan replied that the MBTA has no intention of subsidizing slow-speed boats.

After commuters yelled at him to explain the state's position, Karash said, "The feeling when the state first went out to bid on boats was that if it could offer half-hour service, it would be more attractive."

Outside of a dispute about how the evening boat trips should be scheduled, the rest of the commuters' complaints were directed at the Gracious Lady.

Sheerin informed the officials he had just sent a letter to Hinghams selectmen listing examples of allegedly poor operation and service practices aboard the high-speed boat.

The letter was prompted, he said, by a selectmen's meeting last week where Charles English, the boat's owner, asked the town to sponsor a second vessel that he would operate.

Sheerin said he also sent to the selectmen a copy of a complaint he made to the U.S. Coast Guard about the Gracious Lady frightening Nantascot passengers by passing the slower boat without first signaling. The alleged incident happened June 18 under the Long Island Bridge at the entrance to Quincy Bay.

Cecile Pappazian from the state Office of Transportation told Sheerin that she had not received complaints from the Nantascot's captain about the Gracious Lady's conduct.

Other complaints by commuters included the need

The Dragon ends a perfect record

By Claire McDonough

Well, it's finally happened. The Dragon had an automobile accident. Did you hear me, world? The Dragon had an automobile accident and it was all his fault.

Do I come across as not entirely sorry this has happened? Do you detect the slightest trace of a gloat in my words?

Clever of you to notice.

For 37 years the Dragon piloted an assortment of motor vehicles around this nation's roads. Never scratched a thing. Bad road conditions, other drivers who were drunk and/or homicidal, mechanical failures — none of these things daunted him.

We mere mortals who managed to dent — o.k., crumple — a fender in a parking lot were treated with scorn.

A competent driver, we were told, does not have accidents.

As a matter of fact, this paragon of the highways informed us, there really is no such thing as an accident.

Did a truck come barreling down a road and smash into our vehicle?

We should have foreseen the possibility and planned an escape route through a nearby field before entering the intersection. Just in case.

Did another driver cut us off in traffic, causing us to apply our brakes hastily? Did this, in turn, cause the vehicle behind us to skid on a patch of ice and hit us from the rear?

A glance at the rear view mirror before braking would have apprised us of the likelihood of this occurrence, and we could have veered to one side or the other.

Did our power steering fluid run out just as we were executing a sharp turn? Did this cause us to overcompensate, lightly grazing a Lincoln Continental?

Totally inexcusable. Someone who can't handle a simple failure of power steering has no business on the road.

The offending party was pardoned only because it is commonly held, the world over, that women drivers cannot be held to the same standard of excellence as men.

Right?

Several weeks ago the Dragon and I were returning home on Rte. 123.

It was raining, and the roads were slippery.

Up ahead, a driver stopped, directional signals indicating an intended left turn.

Calmly, the Dragon applied the brakes. The car skidded.

He turned to the right, so he could drive around the other car. The power steering failed.

The rest was like a slow-motion movie sequence. We could see we were going to hit the other vehicle and we braced ourselves.

The Dragon sounded his horn in warning. Inevitably, our car hit the other car.

No one was hurt and we exchanged papers with the instant fellowship that is often shared by people who narrowly escape mutual disaster.

We resumed our drive home and I maintained a prudent silence for the first mile or so.

Then my baser nature won out.

"Slippery road," I offered slyly.

The Dragon's knuckles showed white. "That's no excuse. I should have compensated."

I smiled. "It's a problem when you run out of steering fluid."

"I knew it was low," he muttered through clenched teeth. "I should have started to turn earlier."

"Well," I chortled, "the other driver was a woman. She must have been doing something wrong."

The Dragon stopped the car and looked at me. "She was doing everything perfectly. It was entirely my fault. There was not one thing that woman could have done to keep me from hitting her. I'm just glad no one was hurt."

I relented and squeezed his hand.

"I'm proud of you, Honey," I told him. "It takes real maturity to admit it when you're wrong."

My baser nature triumphed again. "As a matter of fact, you took it like a woman."

Complaints ...

to get the Gracious Lady to depart on time and the justification that she receive the most lucrative (i.e., popular) runs on the new schedule.

Kinahan and Joseph Cahill, MBTA manager of passenger service, explained that boats departing late will be fined.

The fairness of the schedule was not clearly addressed at Monday night's meeting. But Dragonfish owner Goodell commented after the meeting, "I do feel I'm the Gracous Lady's backup boat and will go out of business when the subsidizing stops."

He added, "The state is doing a fine job with trying to subsidize and increase a boat service from Hingham to Boston. And they chose the best-qualified operators. I'm going to see this through and give the South Shore good boat service."

No representative of the Gracious Lady's Massachusetts Bay Commuter Service was present at the meeting.

Bud English, vice president of operations, said Monday morning he had no intention of attending the meeting that night because a week ago the state had told him his schedule was set and could go to print.

"We deserve the preferred scheduling," English said in a telephone interview Tuesday morning, "because we brought a boat up (to Hingham) without a dream of being subsidized and ran a whole year before the state offered it. Then everyone came out of the woodwork."

After being told of the numerous complaints at the meeting, English said, "Can I be doing that much wrong when 30 people, who are mostly Nantascot customers, complain at a meeting? I carry over 800 passengers a day, the Dragonfish approximately 300, and the Nantascot averages 41. I can bet you those complaints weren't coming from my passengers."

State officials will be back in Hingham tonight (Thursday) as the MBTA holds a meeting at 7 p.m. in Barnes Auditorium, town hall, to determine how well South Shore residents are being served by the T.

Murray's memos

Report from the State House

By Mary Jeanette Murray

Representative Mary Jeanette Murray recently announced that Public Safety will increase their commitment toward the tracking of missing children and adults with the expansion of the State Police Missing Person Unit and the unveiling of new procedures for police agencies statewide.

"The State Police Missing Persons Unit," Mary Jeanette went on to say, "will now have three state troopers assigned fulltime with additional expertise from the agency's research department."

"The State Police unit, one of the first of its kind in the nation, will continue to aid in local police departments in the gathering of information about the 4,300 men, women, and children currently listed as missing in Massachusetts."

"Nationally, it is estimated that some 50,000 children are abducted by strangers each year. Another 100,000 or more are illegally taken by a parent, and somewhere between one and two million youngsters run away annually," Representative Murray stated.

"One national organization estimates that approximately 60 percent of parents who kidnap their children from legal custodians have criminal records, and the majority of those children are later abused, abandoned or found dead, a deplorable fact," Murray continued.

A Florida study reported that three out of four runaways who remained on the streets for more than two weeks, supported themselves through theft, drug dealing, prostitution or pornography.

The Missing Persons Unit will investigate cases for out-of-state law enforcement agencies and when asked for help by local authorities. In addition, they will be resource centers for families of missing persons and volunteer organizations concerned about the problem.

Trooper Joan Wisher, who has operated the unit for the past year, will be joined by Corporal Donald Boudreau and Trooper Barbara Reilly. All three will be heading to New Jersey next month for a series of regional missing person training seminars.

Expansion of the unit was just one of ten recommendations made by a panel of experts brought together by the Statewide Anti-Crime Council in January

One recommendation, a model policy and procedure plan for all police departments, was endorsed this month by the Massachusetts Police Chiefs Association.

Local police departments will now: take all missing persons reported immediately rather than apply the 24 hour waiting period that had been the unwritten rule of some departments; enter all missing persons reports into both state and national crime computer systems; use new standardized missing person report forms; encourage volunteer organizations progress.

At the state level, courses in missing person investigations will now be incorporated in police academy curriculum and inservice training at each department.

Computerized information banks will be developed on unidentitied bodies. Currently the bodies of 22 persons remain unidentified.

A booklet of photos and descriptions of missing persons will be periodically distributed to all police agencies. In addition, the help of local media will be enlisted to publish and broadcast photos of persons still believed to be in the area.

The panel also endorsed voluntary, carefully supervised, fingerprinting of children, providing parents retain the only copies of those prints.

Complaint filed against 'Gracious Lady'

By Elisabeth Gorfinkle and Patricia Desmond

The U.S. Coast Guard is investigating a formal complaint filed about the operation of the high-speed commuter boat, Gracious Lady.

The complaint, filed by Russell Sheerin of Hingham, a passenger on the commuter boat Nantascot, charges that the Gracious Lady cut off the Nantascot under the Long Island Bridge at the entrance to Quincy Bay in the early evening of June 18. The charge alleges negligent operation of the high-speed boat.

The "citizen's report of negligent operation" submitted to the Coast Guard also included a list of 13 passengers who had allegedly witnessed the incident.

Bud English, vice president of operations for Massachusetts Bay Commuter Service, the Gracious Lady's owner, said he felt there was no problem with the complaint and that the proper signals had been made at the time of the incident.

The Marine Safety Office of the Coast Guard's Boston installantion is conducting the investigation.

Coast Guard officials had no immediate comment on the matter because the investigation is not yet complete.

Sheerin also wrote to the Hingham selectmen this week, relative to their discussion last week with Gracious Lady owner Charles English on the possibility of the town sponsoring a second high-speed boat for English. Sheerin suggested the committee do some research on such questions as whether another boat is really needed, given the cold "off" season of November to March and whether the high-speed boats, particularly the Gracious Lady are giving service worthy of their state subsidies.

In addition, Sheerin suggested that the town fill some of the potholes on the access road to the state-owned commuter boat dock.

Martha Reardon of Hingham, associate state DPW commissioner, told the meeting Monday night, when Sheerin raised that point, that the road itself is owned by Paul Neelon of Colonial Coastal Corporation, the shipyard owners, and that he is the party responsible for filling the admittedly crater-like potholes.

Local programming begins in Cohasset cable TV

Cable television has arrived. By the conclusion of this summer, anyone who wanted cable, will be watching it from the comfort of his home.

American Cablesystems Community Coordinator John Ronan reported that approximately 220 homes are now receiving cable programming in Cohasset. Ten installations are being made per day, with that number scheduled to increase by the end of the month.

Although the cable company predicted about 50 percent of the population would accept cable, that number is viewed as disappointing. At Tuesday night's cable advisory committee meeting, Ronan explained the company would like a 60 percent penetration rate, and they anticipate the increase in the next few months.

As neighbors see neighbors signing cable subscriptions, they will be encouraged to join the ranks, he added.

Scituate, another community served by American Cablesystems, is exceeding its predicted subscription rate.

Construction of 41 miles of aerial cable is complete, Ronan said, and four miles of underground cable in the Jerusalem Road area will be finished soon.

Ronan had a lot of news to relate to the advisory committee since last month. The studio on Stagecoach Way is almost complete, with furniture and additional equipment expected soon.

Several local programming efforts have been completed, he added, including the special town meeting, the high school graduation, Deer Hill graduation and Olympic games, the Community Center nursery school graduation, and most recently, the art center's FirstFest.

Concerning FirstFest, Ronan described it as "a local programming bonanza." He and a volunteer camera crew filmed ten hours of FirstFest events, including two hours of a jazz concert, breakdancing, and art show award ceremonies. The raw footage, he said, will be edited into a shortened form. The jazz concert will be aired on the local station Channel 3, Friday night.

There will be a total of 14 local programming hours per week on Channel 3, he said, effective immediately. The hours that local origination programs will be aired include: Monday, 5-9 p.m., Tuesday, 5-7 p.m., Wednesday, 5-7 p.m., Thursday, 5-9 p.m., and Friday, 5-7 p.m.

Political meetings, including selectmen and school committee meetings, will be video taped "as soon as possible," Ronan said. Other areas of taping interest this summer include baseball games such as Little League and men's softball, and some studio programming.

Upcoming events which will be taped by the cable company include a tour of the Historical Society Museums and a short piece on Cohasset's history. Ronan explained that all tapes filmed by American Cablesystems will be completely available for other use by the community organization which produced the taped event. For instance, if the art center wished to use segments of the cable tape of FirstFest for future advertising purposes, that is permissible, he said.

The main concern Ronan expressed at the meeting, was the inadequate number of volunteers who will film and produce the local programs. Currently, he has three teenaged interns who come to the studio each day and help out with all angles of cable television production. Although they are not yet compensated for their efforts, Ronan said they are receiving a free and encompassing education in television production.

At some point, some local programming, likely sports events, will include sponsorship from local companies. At that time, the camera crews will be paid for the work, he said.

Ronan added he would like at least five to ten people to become actively involved in local program scheduling and shooting. A workshop for young adults, aged 14 to 18, will be held July 24, 25, and 26 at the studio.

An open house celebration of the Stagecoach Way studio is planned for mid-September. Although the facility will be ready the end of this month, the committee members felt more residents will be available to attend such an event after the summer.

There will be a workshop for any interested Cohasset resident next month on Wednesday, beginning July 11 at 7 p.m., and concluding Aug. 1. There will be a Thursday night workshop, beginning at 7 p.m. July 12 which will end Aug. 2. Although many residents have completed the workshop course, there are only a few volunteers who are currently producing shows, Ronan said.

Two of every ten people who complete the workshop training ever actually help to produce a local cable program. Ronan said he would like to see that number increase. The greater number of staff members producing shows, the greater number of community events will be filmed on cable television, he explained.

The Bulletin Board channel, he said, will be used by community organizations and town departments to relate events of a non-profit or charitable nature. These are not advertisements, Ronan said, but a community serviced provided by the cable network for local clubs and organizations that want to publicize special events.

The Flying Scots are off and running once again with a large fleet of nine boats. These boats race every Saturday in both good and poor weather conditions.

Last Saturday's race was run under a moderate wind, blowing about five to 12 miles per hour. The first place finisher, Roger Porter, led the entire race. Behind him were many position changes in the remainder of the fleet.

The results of the race were: First place, Roger Porter; Second place. Steve Bartow; Third place, Dick Horn; Fourth place, Bob Jackson; Fifth place, Peter Chapman; Sixth place Peter Goedecke; Seventh place. Bob Smith; and Eighth place, Ray Kasperowicz.

The Little League will be winding up their regular season this Saturday. Overall the season has gone very well, and the kids have had a good time. The League has many young players, and all the kids have played well.

There are four teams in the league this year. The winner of the first half, the Braves, is coached by both Tim Marsac and George Ellinger. The rest of the teams are the Red Sox coached by Jeff Ladd, the Dodgers coached by John Rolandelli, and the Yankees coached by Jack McDonald.

This year the Dodgers' Eric Daniels has led the league in homeruns. Eric has hit a total of three home runs this season.

While playing at Cohasset, both girls received numerous awards and honors. Carla was named MVP for the Christmas Tournament and was also chosen as an All-Star for the South Shore League. Janet is an All-Star for the league in basketball, soccer and softball.

The Southeast team will represent the best of local talent in competition with regional teams from across the state in the Bay State Games Finals. The Finals will be held in locations throughout Greater Boston July 12-15.

Jill Nedrow is returning to the Bay State Games roster for her second consecutive year and brings with her, playing experience from the Massachusetts State Select 'B' Team and State All-Star Team.

The Southeast team is coached by Lauren Gregg, currently an assistant coach at Harvard University and formerly an assistant coach at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

The Southeast soccer team will represent the best of local talent in competition with regional teams from across the state. The Bay State Games Finals will take place at locations throughout Greater Boston July 12-15. The Bay State Games are Massachusetts own Olympic-style sports festival, showcasing outstanding amateur athletes on a local level, in fourteen different sports.

Basketball honor

John Reidy of Cohasset has been named to the 1984 Bay State Games Boy's Scholastic Southeast soccer team. He will be playing forward for the Bay State Games team.

These athletes survived the toughest, most competitive try-out for any Bay State Games team in the state. Seventy-two players attended the tryout, hoping to make the listing of the final roster of eighteen players.

Reidy has been starting on the Cohasset High School team since 8th grade and has also been a member of the Massachusetts State Select Team.

VA interest rate increase

The Veterans Administration announed an increase in its maximum home loan interest rate — from 13 1/2 percent to 14 percent, effective Tuesday, May 29.

The last change in the interest rate occurred on May 8 when it was increased by one-half percent to 13 1/2 percent.

The VA action also increased the maximum rates by one-half percent to 14 1/4 percent for graduated payment mortgages, 16 percent for manufactured housing loans and 15 1/2 percent for manufactured housing lots, combination manufactured home and lot loans, and home improvement loans.

The rate change does not affect existing loans, whose interest rate remains the same for the life of the agreement.

VA home loans can be used to purchase, construct, alter, improve, repair or refinance a home. This includes the purchase of condominiums and mobile homes, with or without a lot.

"Working Together For Better Dental Health"

from the kitchen

by Joan Pinkham

As I'm about to celebrate yet another birthday, I think of the great pitcher, Satchel Paige, who offered this priceless bit of advice: "Don't look back." But I do. When the "great and glorious" Fourth of July comes around, I wonder how many teenagers have ever known what sparklers looked like when darkness finally arrived the night before the Fourth, or savored the smell of punk which seemed to have an Oriental aroma. I can still remember the hiss and dainty quick explosions of lady fingers and Roman candles arcing overhead. Carnivals, parades and band concerts were still to come the next day, but the night before the Fourth and its bonfires was special indeed. Any day at all, Debby Morris' dish tastes awfully good and is called since then, for it serves 10 to 12, is delicious and easy and called

POTATOES SUPREME

2 lb. frozen Ore-Ida Potatoes O'Brien
1 pt. sour cream
1/2 c. melted margarine
1 can cream chicken soup
1 large pkg. shredded Mozzarella cheese
1 tsp. salt and pepper, mixed

Mix all ingredients and put into 9 x 13" pan. Crumble 2 c. corn flakes and add an additional 1/2 c. melted margarine. Spread this topping over all and bake one hour at 375.

RATATOUILLE

1/3 c. salad oil
2 small onions, sliced thin
2 small green peppers, sliced thin
1 or 2 cloves garlic, minced
1 medium eggplant, cut in small chunks
2 medium zucchini, sliced thin
2 tomatoes, sliced thin
Salt and oregano to taste

Heat oil in large skillet or heavy saucepan. Saute onions, green peppers and garlic over low heat until limp. Remove from pan and set aside. Add eggplant and zucchini (both unpeeled) to pan; saute and keep turning until slightly softened. Add tomatoes, salt, oregano, also onions and peppers. Cover and simmer for approx. 30 min. Stir occasionally. Serves 4 to 6. Freezes well.

And speaking of birthdays, it was Francis Bacon who wrote: "Age appears to be best in four things—old wood best to burn, old wine to drink, old friends to trust and old authors to read." Also dear to the heart and apt to conjure up memories are fragrances such as that of a homemade pie fresh from the oven, cooling on the windowsill. Now is the season when rhubarb is on the market. Botanically, it is a vegetable and came from Europe about 1800, known as pieplant. Chock-full of Vitamin C and calcium, rhubarb may be used in tarts, sauces, puddings, punch, jams and jellies, as well as Jane Dwyer's

FRESH RHUBARB PIE

9" pie shell with top crust
1 1/3 to 2 c. sugar
1/3 c. flour
4 c. cut-up rhubarb
1½T butter

Mix flour with sugar (amount depends on tartness of rhubarb and your taste); mix lightly through rhubarb. Pour into pie shell; dot with butter. Cover with top crust with slits cut in it (or make lattice work top). Sprinkle with sugar; seal and flute. Cover edge with 1½" strip of foil to prevent excessive browning. Bake in 425 degree oven 40 to 50 min. until juice begins to bubble through slits. Serve warm!

Even in our youth-oriented society, cookouts on a summer weekend are a way of life enjoyed by all ages. It's an old American custom when families and friends gather, to help one's hostess by bringing along a dish. In 1974, one of the first recipes sent in by our readers was this one from Ruth Henderson. I've made it many times

Angler's corner

By George Doucette

This week should see bluefish coming into the area on their summer feeding spree. The hot spots in the last few years have been the "H" Buoy off Scituate, the mouth of the North River, Duxbury Beach and Bay, and Plymouth Harbor area.

The main attraction for the blues is the large schools of menhaden or pogies (a herring-type fish) that stay around in the rivers and bays all summer long.

Best bet for catching pogies for bait is a weighted treble hook cast into the school and jigged hard until you foul hook a fish. Live line your fish right back out with a hook in his back or nose and let him swim free near the other bait fish. Use a large 6/0 or 7/0 hook and a 60 lb. steel leader as bluefish will cut the line with their sharp teeth.

Watch the schools of bait fish as they swim around you if you see them surface in large groups exploding the surface and spraying water everywhere. That's a sure sign that feeding bluefish are in the area. If a bluefish takes your bait, line will sing off your reel at a fast pace. Wait a few moments then set the hook hard. It's a good idea to strike the fish a second time to set the hook.

When using pogies for bait you will need an aerated cooler to keep them alive for any length of time. Changing the water frequenty also helps. This technique, although simple, is a good way to get your feet wet on bluefish. Use a good stiff 6' to 7½' boat rod; an 8' to 9' spinning rod with a good heavy-duty reel and mono filament line; 40 lb. line on boat reel, or 20 to 25 lb. line on spinning reel.

This type of fishing is best done from a boat but there are several places it can be done from shore.

Education Bill Support

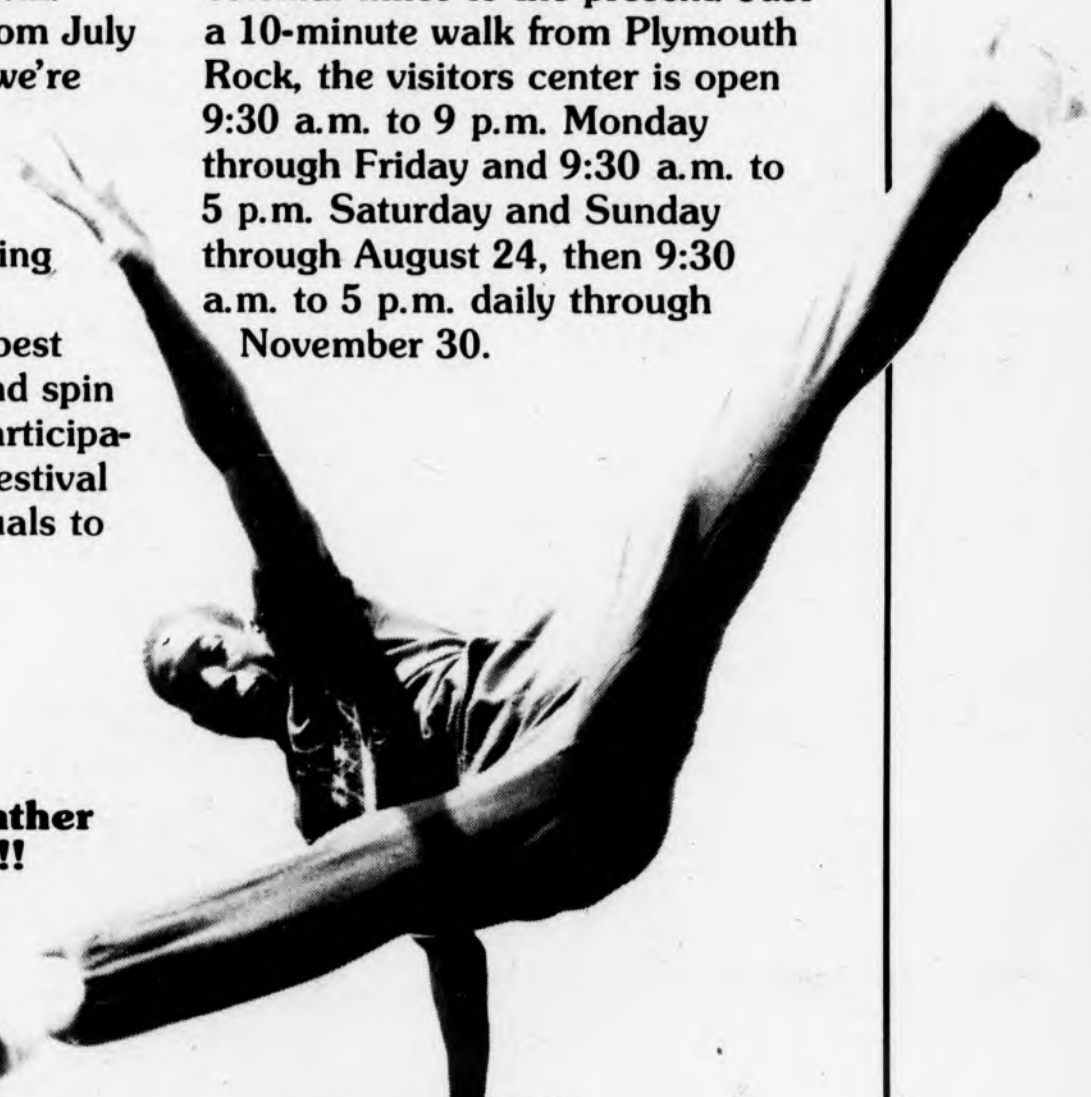
MTA President Carol A. Doherty has given Democratic members of the Massachusetts Legislature 2,100 additional reasons to support House 5704, the comprehensive school reform bill coming up for debate later this month.

Doherty gave Democratic members of the Senate and House of Representatives copies of 55 petitions containing more than 2,100 signatures of Democratic Party activists who have urged passage of the measure.

The signatures were gathered by the 402 MTA delegates to the June 8-9 Democratic State Convention in Worcester. More than half of the delegates to the convention signed the "Petition for Quality Education," which declares they are "committed to the improvement and funding of services and programs in the public schools," and adds the State must "increase its share of funding for public education at least to the extent that such is necessary to implement the provisions of House 5704."

"Legislators already know that House 5704 will bring sorely needed resources and improvements to school systems across Massachusetts," said Doherty. "Now they know that key party decision-makers agree.

"It's clear that in the post-Proposition 2 1/2 era, the state must take a leadership role in providing increased financial and legislative support for our public schools. We're thrilled that so many Democratic leaders concur with that view," Doherty said.



Now also open to 9 p.m. Monday - Friday

An unknown 'relative' unveils another time, place

By Lois Martin

I call her Lila.

But in truth I haven't the foggiest idea what her name might be, or more accurately what her name was when she lived.

It's highly unlikely that she lives now, from what I know of her. More likely her heyday was in the 1890s at best, if not before.

Lila is part of my home, thereby of my life. She is a portrait on the wall of a small room which I use a lot. There are those who ask why I keep her there, why I allow her such primary space. But in fact, this woman, drawn in charcoal and mounted within a large frame, has developed a place with me that would not be easily surrendered.

PATCHES

For perhaps 10 years Lila was hidden from me, unknown, behind an Oriental watercolor that was in that same frame. And at a yard sale a man who wanted the print didn't want the frame.

So there was, without my knowing it would be, an unveiling of the woman whom I call Lila.

There behind the colorful drawing was a black and white portrait of a woman in her late teens or early 20s. I looked at her closely, trying to find in her face semblances of mine and somehow a relationship in my family that would account for her placement in my home.

I found none. Lila wears a modest black dress. It is a high-necked one, whose severity is impeached only by the prim white collar. On the bodice there is embroidery work and I have judged it to have been her best winter garment. She was, after all, being preserved and she had no way of knowing that I in my time and place would honor that preservation.

Her face is pretty, though woefully and perhaps pretentiously proper. She neither scowls nor smiles. Instead I view her expression as a veil which I, well into the 20th century, am trying to remove for better understanding.

Lila's hair is carefully arranged. There is a hint of the loosened French braid in her updo on each side of a softened pug of her day. And beneath that brow are Lila's eyes, the keepers of the enigma I seek to resolve.

At first I joked about hanging her in my little room beside the kitchen. So complete is her benign expression that I wondered if on cold winter nights when fireplaces seemed to falter in extra duty, I might wish her instead to be a bouquet of generous blossoms that promised more life and verve and hope.

But she and I went the winter together in its best and in its most bleak moments. Never once did I find her other than a steadfast comrade of silent companionship on my wall.

A friend had hung it there. Her frame is nearly as heavy as is her demeanor. And in recent weeks I've cast a glance because I know something she never did.

She and I, Lila and I, will move. And somehow there will be a loss in what we've known in this trusting sharing of space. I see her from my kitchen table, one of the few things left unpacked. And I scour in my mind for the proper place for Lila in what will be her new surroundings. No one can account for my wanting to take her with me, let alone to find new prominence in a different home.

Strange, my loyalty to this unknown person somehow has for me a quality usually reserved for the living. Perhaps I cling to the unlikely idea that she's a relative of mine.

If nothing else, Lila is a woman who lived before me. I believe these things about her . . . that she played the piano, perhaps well, if unfortuantely choosing tunes that featured minor keys while I'd choose major ones. I think she sometime married only after having been schooled for, in her gentle day and way, the acceptable art of teaching the young.

But I tell you, as surely as I would know myself better and better, there was far more to Lila in her life than she has let on in that portrait. She was able. She was strong. And part of that strength lay in not letting it be viewed openly.

Lila was not entirely in tune with her time, though she never used weapons of will against it.

Silly, isn't it? To waste one's thoughts and mind on a time and a person unknown and unconnected.

But this I believe. If our places were different, Lila's and mine, if I were a charcoal drawing done for someone's munificence over a fireplace, and if I somehow were lost to be passed along behind a drawing more greedy of life's color, and if, yes, if Lila had discovered me as I had been, without her having known it, she'd have kept me.

Somewhere I would be placed in the proud presence of a different generation to see and to be seen. There is even in strangership, an understanding and a cause for preservation in the unique sisterhood of our lives.

She moves with me. Maybe some more oblique persuasion might say, 'through me.' Who knows . . . but she sure as heck gets a good spot in the new house.

COM/Electric customers to see rate increase

Customers of Commonwealth Electric Company will see a significant rise in their bills during July, August and September if the Department of Public Utilities (DPU) approves the company's request to increase its power cost charge (PCC).

According to R.F. MacDonald, COM/Electric vice president of customer services, the increase brings the power cost charge back to the level of April and May.

"There was a temporary and significantly lower PCC for the month of June only, because of a decision of the DPU which excluded certain expenses from the charge. Even though those charges still are not in our filed request, recent and continuing increases in the price of oil used to generate electricity bring the charge back to approximately the same level as the two previous months. The price of oil is currently at the highest cost per barrel since April 1981," MacDonald explained.

If the requested increase is approved by the DPU, a typical residential non-heating customer using 427 kilowatt hours (KWH) a month will see an increase in his bill of $6.41. Residential heating customers using 974 KWH a month will pay $14.22. more.

The proposed increase is subject to a public hearing and thorough examination of extensive data concerning the cost of fuel and purchased power which COM/Electric supplied the DPU at the time of the filing.

If approved, the increase will take effect with July billings.

Scituate Historical Society to open town tour sites

Scituate Historical Society has opened a busy season with tours scheduled in July, Heritage Days in Aug. and in Sept.

The society will open all six historical sites which include the Old Scituate Lighthouse, the Cudworth House and Barn, the Lawson Tower, the Mann Historical Museum, the Stockbridge Mill, and the Old Oaken Bucket Homestead.

Scituate has a fascinating variety of experiences to offer in its historical sites — for example — a lighthouse with a story of two teenage heroines of the War of 1812, a water tower with chimes, a working mill, homes that are classic examples of early architecture and the homestead of a well-known American poet.

Tours begin at 1 p.m. and end at 5 p.m.

The Cudworth House and Barn on First Parish Rd., the headquarters of the Society, is also open from June to Sept., Wednesday through Saturday from 2 to 5 p.m. The land was granted to Richard Garret before 1646 and the present house was built by the grandson of James Cudworth in 1779. It is furnished to duplicate an early American Home. The barn has a collection of early farm implements and carriages.

Across the street is the Lawson Tower built by Thomas W. Lawson in 1902 to cover a water tank he considered too ugly to view from his estate — Dreamwold. Climb the 123 steps to see the spectacular view all the way to Marblehead on a clear day.

From this area it is a short ride to the harbor and then out to Old Scituate Lighthouse at Cedar Point. Tour the site and the home of Rebecca and Abigail Bates and hear the story of their heroic deed.

Passing through the town itself, following the map and brochure one can pick up at any of the sites, one comes to Greenfield Lane and the Mann Historical Museum.

Originally this was the home of Capt. Thomas Mann, a sea captain of the 1700's. For three centuries only the Mann family occupied this house until 1886. It is a museum of collections from the many occupations and interests of this family.

In the section of Scituate called Greenbush is the Old Oaken Bucket Pond and across from it is the oldest water-driven grist mill in the United States — The Stockbridge Mill 1640.

Still active and working hard, it mills corn while visitors watch, and the corn is sold to those who will bake it into cornbread and make Indian pudding — a true New England dish. The original chest that held the grain — regarded as the oldest in this country — also is on display there.

The mill and the pond were immortalized by Samuel Woodworth, the poet, whose homestead is nearby — the Old Oaken Bucket Homestead. This house has a wing as a museum housing the growing collection of Samuel Woodworth memorabilia.

The other tours for this 1984 season will be in July, Heritage Days in Aug. and in Sept. A small donation is asked at each site.

HUMAROCK BEACH SCITUATE

Richardson addresses the necessity for RIF

By Judy Gilman

The magna cum laude graduate of Radcliffe College standing in front of the crowd of women Tuesday morning never had to worry about being a functional illiterate. Yet, in a brief presentation, she made a compelling case for fighting what some see as growing illiteracy in the U.S. by supporting the movement known as RIF—Reading is Fundamental.

Anne Richardson is the wife of GOP Senate candidate Elliot Richardson, who some describe as having held almost every appointive post there is—and a good many elected ones, as well.

But her message Tuesday morning had nothing to do with Senatorial politics.

She's chairman of the national board of RIF, and it became very apparent, in the few minutes of her speech, that this is no honorary title. For this woman is obviously out on the road with the RIF program, convincing kids that reading is FUN ("The FUN is what we emphasize").

She's seen the program at work on a Navajo Indian reservation, where the youngsters took their books home to read them to their grandparents—it didn't matter that the grandparents didn't understand English, Richardson said, it was a new means of sharing the oral Indian tradition, and the grandparents were delighted.

The RIF program was started in 1966 by Margaret McNamara in Washington, D.C., when she saw the tremendous progress made in tutoring fifth grade students when they were given books to take home as their own. She was tutoring a particular child without much success and, in order to give him something interesting to work on, brought in a book her son had had as a child. The student asked, "Can I keep it?" It made his day when McNamara said yes, and she began to see the value of distributing books to children.

From the original project in Washington, the program has spread to include 3,000 local projects in all 50 states, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands and Guam. Over 100,000 volunteers are involved in distributing an average of three books per child per year.

There are no income or other guidelines, Richardson was quick to point out, adding that a middle-class home may not have books available as well as a less well-to-do environment.

Parents also ask for tips on helping their children with reading and seem somewhat flabbergasted with the suggestion of reading aloud. "It's certainly not as much of a family custom now as it once was," Richardson said, though husband Elliot is still begged by his children, now in their 20s and 30s, for an after-dinner Sherlock Holmes story when they're home visiting.

All this activity of giving away books to kids (the programs are usually sponsored by local service organizations, PTOs and the like, though they can be sponsored by anyone, held anywhere) sounds like a good and wonderful thing to do. But there are more compelling reasons to be vitally interested in RIF, as Richardson reeled off statistics, statistics that are alarming.

Thirteen percent of all 17-year-olds in the country are functionally illiterate. Not only does that condemn them to a life of low-paying work, it can be hazardous to their health as well, as Richardson found out on a visit to Texas oil rigs. Many accidents occurred because workers couldn't read signs on the machinery warning to stay away or telling which way to turn a valve handle. Electrocution has been the result in some cases.

There are costs to society, as well. Of juvenile delinquents currently in the corrections systems of the country, 85 percent are functionally illiterate. The series of steps is simple. If one can't read, one can't get a good job. If one can't get a good job, crime becomes that much more tempting in a society where success is measured in material terms.

How does the U.S. measure up to other countries? Not as well as some would like, according to Richardson. A recent University of Michigan studied weighed groups of first and fifth graders in Minneapolis schools against their peers in schools in Japan and Taiwan.

The results are not encouraging. From day 1, the U.S. kids are behind the others. "We can no longer get away with blaming the schools and the teachers," Richardson said. "It starts in the families."

By fifth grade, American kids spend twice as much class time on reading skills as the Japanese and Taiwanese students—but they're still behind on their skill levels.

Though the situation is serious, Richardson feels the situation is being helped by programs by RIF—and by the awareness of the reading population of the entire country that literacy is not just a problem in the Third World. It's right here in these United States as well.

She urged her listeners in Hingham Tuesday morning to consider starting RIF programs, both as volunteers and sponsors.

Brass Quintet to perform July 7

The internationally acclaimed Empire Brass Quintet will perform in Scituate Saturday, July 7, at 8 p.m., at the Scituate Town Library.

The Quintet's program will include works by Albinoni, Bach, Mozart, Handel, Bolling, Saches, Bernstein and Clarke. Tickets for this performance are $6 each and may be reserved in advance by calling 545-0238, or by writing Prelude, Box 109, North Scituate, 02060. Tickets will also be available at the door the evening of the performance, but advance reservations are encouraged.

Since their introduction to one another by Leonard Bernstein at Tanglewood in 1971, the Empire Brass Quintet have become an ensemble of international reputation and acclaim.

Currently the Quintet-in-Residence at Boston University, they had a distinguished career in the United States, Europe and Japan. They will return from a month-long concert tour of Italy just prior to their Scituate performance.

In 1976, the Quintet became the first brass ensemble ever to receive the Naumberg Chamber Music Award. In March of this year, the Quintet performed the World Premiere of Ira Taxin's "Concerto for Brass Quintet and Orchestra" with the Cincinnati Symphony. In addition to its Italy tour, the Quintet spent the month of May touring and performing in Japan.

The Quintet is comprised of Rolf Smedvig (trumpet), Charles A. Lewis, Jr. (trumpet), David Ohanian (french horn), Lawrence Isaacson (trombone) and J. Samuel Pilafian (tuba). The members of the Quintet have recorded nine albums to date, including "The American Brass Band Journal Revisited" in 1976 for CBS, "Renaissance" and "Broque Brass" and "Digital Hits of 1740."

The Quintet has been hailed as "the foremost of the American brass ensembles," and the Boston Globe wrote, "They simply have no competition..."

Funding for this performance has been provided in part by a grant from the Raytheon Company, through the New England Foundation for the Arts and the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities.

Season's subscriptions for the Prelude Concert Series are still available and may be obtained by contacting the number above.

Musings

By John H. Cutler

☐ I would rather be praised with faint damns than damned with faint praise.

☐ Don't call him the salt of the earth. Sodium is now in disrepute

☐ I'm glad to see in a recent issue of Time magazine a quote from Cato the Elder, which has appeared before in Musings: I would rather have men ask, after I am dead, why I have no monument than ask why I have one.

☐ Don't you think it's presumptuous for any Democrat to run against Elliot Richardson, considering Elliot's unprecedented background?

☐ When your work speaks for itself, don't interrupt.

☐ I wouldn't blame an ape in captivity for wondering whether he was his brother's keeper or his keeper's brother.

☐ Excerpt from the Arkansas Democrat: "Sisters reunited after 18 years in checkout counter at supermarket."

☐ Tomorrow is the day when idlers work and fools reform. Don't wait. Do your work and reform today.

☐ I read this in a local newspaper: "A man named I.Q. Smart lives in a Massachusetts town called Braintree." I called the operator to get his telephone number only to find there was no such person.

☐ During WWII parrots were kept on the Eiffel Tower to warn of approaching aircraft long before the planes were heard or seen by human spotters.

☐ Although 342 years have passed since 1642, when the first Harvard College commencement was held, today marks only the 333rd commencement because of exercises omitted in years of war and plague.

☐ People who hurry through life die much earlier.

☐ Most folks waste too much time preparing for things that never happen.
